Woman Slain as Boy, 5, Plays With Gun

Policeman's Wife Killed By Slug From His Revolver

One of Triplets Visiting Childless Couple at SE Home Discharges Weapon

(Picture on Page 6.)

By V. R. Montanari
Post Reporter

The wife of a District policeman was accidentally killed yesterday by a shot from her husband's service revolver in the hands of a 5-year-old boy.

The child was one of triplets brought to her home by their father for a Sunday morning visit.

Victim of the tragedy was Mrs. Florabel B. Henning, 57, wife of Pvt. Oren J. Henning, 56, of the Police Department's communications and records division.

The distraught husband said she had asked him to invite Charles Elgin, a neighborhood friend of his, to bring his triplets over because she had heard so much about them and had never seen them.

Revolver on Dining Table

Henning, who has no children and has not been accustomed to having youngsters in the house, had left his holstered revolver along with his cap and tie on the diningroom table in their two-story brick home at 1331 K st. se.

When Elgin and the youngsters arrived at about 12:15 p. m., Mrs. Henning asked her husband to go out and get some apples for the triplets. When he returned from a store with some apples, he and Mrs. Henning and Elgin went into the kitchen, leaving the triplets in the adjacent dining room.

The three sat down at the kitchen table, Mrs. Henning with her back to the doorway into the dining room.

A shot from the policeman's revolver rang out. The bullet, furrowing the edge of the kitchen door, struck Mrs. Henning in the back, pierced the aorta, near her heart; emerged through her chest and penetrated the bottom of a leg of the kitchen table.

Thought It "Firecracker"

While one of the stunned triplets told police he thought a "firecracker" had gone off, another one of the youngsters, Andrew Magruder Elgin, said he had taken the revolver from the holster and was playing with it when it went off.

Mrs. Henning was pronounced dead by Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner—who had brought the Elgin triplets into the world on April 26, 1944.

The terrified youngsters were taken to their home at 1721 Bay st. se. by their father without knowing the consequences of Andrew's act.

Andrew told his mother, Mrs. Myrtle Elgin, and his grandmothers, Mrs. Lottie Elgin and

U. S. Birth Total Second Highest in 1949 at 3,581,000

The United States birth total last year was the second highest in history, Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing said yesterday.

The estimated 3,581,000 live births reported for 1949, he said, was exceeded only by the 3,699,940 figure in 1947. Last year's total was about 1 percent higher than the 3,535,000 listed for 1948.

The FSA's Public Health Service estimated that about 200,000 additional births occurred in this country in 1949, but were not registered.

'Hated Her for Long Time'

Girl, 14, Kills Twin Sister; Mother Hears Her Call Police

Fresno, Calif., March 19 (AP).—A 14-year-old girl shot and killed her twin sister here early to day because "I hated her."

Assistant District Attorney Dan B. Eymann told this story of the slaying of Sally Richard, by her twin, Alice:

. . . "I hated her"

Alice made her way through their darkened home to a closet which contained a .22 rifle, loaded it, went back to the twins' room and fired a bullet into her sleeping sister's brain.

Eymann said Alice told him she did it "because I hated her. I made up my mind after our argument over the telephone that I was going to kill her. I hated her for a long time and had it in the back of my mind to do it."

He said the quarrel occurred earlier in the evening with the girls arguing about the phone, which Sally was using.

Tells of Earlier Plans

Edgar, a 16-year-old brother, held the phone and kept Sally away so Alice could use it. Alice was quoted as saying, "I'm going to kill you and I'm going to do it with a gun."

Another brother, Robert, 13 — there were eight children in the family—went to his room, took the .22 out of his closet, found it unloaded and hid it under his bed. Later, however, he returned it to the closet.

Eymann asked Alice if she had ever planned to kill Sally before.

"Yes, I had," he quoted her as saying, "but I never had the guts to do it."

He asked why she replied:

"I hated her because she was stupid and loud and always acting

Sitter Raped, Strangled as Baby Sleeps

Columbia, Mo., March 19 (U.P.)—The ravished and strangled body of a 12-year-old girl was found in the home where she had been baby-sitting today and police said the case bore a strong resemblance to a 1946 murder in this quiet college town.

The victim was Jeannette Christman, who was staying at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Romack while the couple attended a bridge party last night.

The Romacks found the body when they returned home about 1:30 a. m. It lay in the living room amid signs of a "terrific struggle," authorities said.

Boone County Prosecutor Carl Sapp said the girl had been bludgeoned with a length of pipe, but not severely enough to kill her. She had been raped and finally killed with an ironing cord, which was wound round her neck.

Only two blocks away, Mary Lou Jenkins, a Stephens College student, was raped and slain in a similar manner in 1946. She also had been strangled with an electric cord. A man was executed for the crime.

Sapp said two other unsuccessful attempts to molest baby-sitters had been made here in the last two months.

Miss Christman was taking care of little Gregory Romack, 2½, who was undisturbed in his crib.

Sapp said the attacker apparently entered through a broken window in the rear of the house.

Spring Due Here Late Today Ending Balmy Winter

Come 11:56 p. m., today astronomers and the Weather Bureau will mark the vernal equinox, which means the sun passes the equator. To poets, dictionaries, and ordinary people it will mean spring has arrived and winter is done.

Then will end one of the warmest winters Washington ever had. Since January 1 the Weather Bureau calculated that the mean daily temperature—which wasn't mean at all—has totaled 509 degrees above mean normal temperature here.

Today, the forecast said, there will be some cloudiness, milder temperatures, with high near 50.

In Atmosphere of Economy

Omnibus Money Bill Battle Opens in House Group Today

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

The first omnibus money bill in modern history will be unveiled today before the full House Appropriations Committee in an atmosphere ripe for an economy upset.

The "single-package" measure, reportedly slashing the President's 1951 budget well over one billion dollars and carrying other economy incentives, already is the target for more cuts.

Whether Appropriations Chairman Clarence Cannon (D., Mo.) can hold the bill to present levels in his committee was open to speculation last night.

In any event, the already closely cropped money measure faces an almost unparalleled economy drive when the big bill rolls out on the House floor for action next week.

Neither House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin (Mass.) nor Representative John Taber (N. Y.), ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, would specify in advance the GOP's economy figure.

"We are going to try to cut it (on the House floor) as deeply as we can without impairing efficient service," Martin said last night.

"What that figure will be we cannot determined until we have access to the records and find

Strike Wave Threatened in Leopold Row

Will Call Walkouts Until He Abdicates, Socialists Announce

Brussels, March 19 (AP).—The Socialists, Belgium's second biggest party, declared today they will call waves of strikes until King Leopold abdicates.

Partisans and opponents of the exiled King exchanged rifle and pistol fire in clashes at Leuden and Erps-Que, but state police forces stopped the fights and no casualties resulted. Police also announced discovery of a large depot of secret arms in a garage.

Belgium, torn over the future of the 48-year-old monarch who surrendered himself and his army to the Germans nearly 10 years ago, thus plunged into deeper crisis, and perhaps toward social strife.

The nation's government collapsed yesterday in deadlock over the royal question, which a popular referendum failed to solve a week ago.

The only authority was the slender caretaker role of Gaston Eyskens, who remained Premier pending formation of a new government. Eyskens, leader of the pro-Leopold Social Christian Catholic Party, accepted today from Regent Prince Charles, brother of the King, the role of "informant" to smooth negotiations for a new government.

This role was not equal to the rank of premier-designate, though he might be asked to try to organize a new government later.

A resolution adopted by delegates of all the Scoialist Party's regional federations, said strike action would be continued "until Leopold III, at last understanding the country's interest should prevail over his own, has left the

Edgar Rice Burroughs Dies; Created Jungle Lord, Tarzan

Tarzana, Calif., March 19 (U.P.)—Edgar Rice Burroughs, the man who created Tarzan, the lord of the jungle, died quietly in bed today while he was reading the Sunday comics.

Burroughs, 74, was reading the comics as he ate his breakfast when the newspaper suddenly dropped from his hands. He closed his eyes and died almost instantly.

His doctor, who was in the sprawling ranchhouse on a regular morning call, attributed death to a heart ailment and hardening of the arteries.

Crippled by a number of heart attacks, Burroughs had been a shut-in for years. In the last three months his illness had been serious, his family said. He had not done any writing since then. In his peak years, he turned out nearly half a million words annually.

Burroughs said recently he still got his greatest pleasure in life from seeing the ape-man he dreamed up 35 years ago still swinging through the jungle.

"I really enjoy the movies," he said in an interview six months ago. "They've done very well by Tarzan."

Caribbean Plots Laid To 3 Powers

Probers Name Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala; Propose Corrective Steps

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

A five-nation committee of inquiry yesterday branded Cuba, Guatemala and the Dominican Republic as responsible for recent plots to stage revolutions, assassinations and armed invasions in the Caribbean.

The committee named high officials among those who aided and abetted the conspiracies. It held the three governments sternly to account for the plotting of political exiles and the illegal traffic in arms on their territories.

And it proposed a series of steps to be taken by the Council of the Organization of American States to prevent such activities in the future. The council will consider the committee's 15,000-word report and recommendations April 3 at what promises to be a stormy meeting.

Pulls No Punches

Veterans of inter-American diplomacy could recall no formal investigation that produced a report as hard-hitting as this one. Previous inter-American documents have been wrapped in a thick layer of diplomatic politeness, but this report threw such wrappings to the winds.

The committee was set up on January 11 by the Council of the O.A.S. after Haiti had made formal charges against its Dominican neighborhood and the Dominicans, in turn, had leveled counter-charges.

The chairman of the committee was Ambassador Jose A. Mora of Uruguay; the other members were Ambassador Guillermo Gutierrez of Bolivia, Eduard Zuleta Angel of Colombia, Paul C. Daniels of the United States and Minister Alfonso Moscos of Ecuador.

Visited Five Countries

With the help of a small staff, the committee visited five countries and conducted scores of interviews to get its material.

In investigating the Haitian complaint against the Dominicans, it found the highest-ranking troublemaker to be Anselmo Paulino, who described himself as an "intimate friend" of President Rafael Trujillo.

Paulino has served as Trujillo's secretary of state for interior and police, and was inspector general of the national police and highways. He is now a member of the Chamber of Deputies, an important businessman in Trujillo City and head of the daily newspaper El Caribe.

It was Paulino, the committee found, who was the chief intermediary in helping two Haitian exiles, former Col. Astrel Roland and Alfred Viau, stir up an insurrection in Haiti from Dominican territory.

The Dominican authorities permitted these two to broadcast in French what the committee found to be "open incitement to the Haitian people to revolt." Roland was also said to be in a plot, financed by "someone close to Paulino," to murder Haitian offi-

Acheson's Dismissal Urged by McCarthy; Commerce 'Reds' Hit

Rooney Says That Agency, Not State Dept., Now Has The Communists

By Jerry Kluttz
Post Reporter

The employe loyalty program of the Commerce Department is being attacked in Congress.

Chairman John J. Rooney (D., N. Y.) of the House Appropriations Commerce Subcommittee, said he had heard that the department "is honeycombed with people belonging to the Communist Party."

His five-man group is investigating the department's loyalty program. After hearing a long explanation of how it operated, Rooney commented:

"They speak of communism in the State Department, but apparently the Communist situation is no longer in the Department of State; I think it is in the Department of Commerce."

Bernard L. Gladieux, executive assistant to the Commerce Secretary, gave the subcommittee this box-score on the department's loyalty operations:

A total of 369 loyalty cases of whom 273 were acquitted, 71 were separated, and 25 are still pending.

Gladieux explained that 26 of the 273 acquitted had been designated as "security risks," and 6 employes in the 25 pending cases also had been given a similar label. None of these people are allowed to handle classified information; they are placed in routine jobs.

Committee Members Critical

Subcommittee members were hotly critical of the security risk practice. They implied that these people should be fired even though they were cleared on loyalty. Gladieux, however, tried to explain the department's dilemma in these words:

"We are probably on very dubious grounds in this whole security business. It has bothered us a lot because we have no authority to designate someone as a security risk. For example, when the Loyalty Review Board clears an individual on appeal and does not find reasonable grounds for believing he is disloyal—in some cases we can say: All right, we have to accept this decision as to loyalty, but in our own discretion we are going to designate the employe as a security risk even so.

"We have no authority to do that and I always feared that it could be successfully challenged. This unclear situation does lead us into all kinds of complications when it comes to reductions in force, transferring people off security work, and other personnel items."

Rooney then suggested that his group stick a rider on the appropriation bill to give Commerce

House Report

Aide Worked 15 Months During Check

By The Associated Press

The House has learned that a Bureau of Standards employe supervised areas of secret work for 15 months before he got his own loyalty clearance.

The man, whose identity was not disclosed, could not enter these restricted areas unless accompanied by one of his own men. Some atomic problems are studied at the bureau.

The story was told in the record of closed-door hearings of a House Appropriations Subcommittee which brought out a defense of the bureau's course by its chief, Dr. Edward U. Condon.

Dr. Condon said the bureau knew the facts in the case, that the investigation was unnecessarily protracted, and hinted that unsustained "improper allegations" had been made against the man.

The hearing record also showed

U. S. Chamber Urges Cities' Defense Plan

Booklet Is Issued Giving Municipalities Steps to Take on Own

By The Associated Press

The United States Chamber of Commerce yesterday advised American cities to get ready in event of a surprise war.

Accordingly it got out a booklet advising them on civilian defense steps which they can take themselves.

On Capitol Hill, Senator Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R., Iowa) spoke out for community organization, warning that mass hysteria could do more damage to America's war-making potential than the bombs in an atomic attack on this country.

Hickenlooper told a reporter he hopes civilian defense hearings being conducted by the Senate-House Atomic Energy Committee will demonstrate that there ought to be no occasion for hysterical reaction to an atomic attack.

The committee will hear New York and Massachusetts witnesses on civilian defense problems when it resumes hearings this afternoon.

"The most important phase of civilian defense is to have organizations in each community that will reassure the people and guard against mass hysteria," Hickenlooper said.

The Chamber of Commerce said all communities may not need a local defense program but they might have to assist others.

Allen Visit Adds To Greek-Yugoslav Deal Speculation

Athens, March 19 (NYHT).—The recent widespread speculation in southeastern Europe on the possibility of a Greek-Yugoslav rapprochement was given added impetus today when George V. Allen, American Ambassador to Yugoslavia, arrived here from Belgrade.

Allen's visit was immediately interpreted by the Athens press as linked with a future deal between Premier Marshal Tito and the Greeks. However, it was learned the Ambassador is not, as rumored, acting as a go-between in the Yugoslav-Greek feud and is not bringing a message from Tito.

President Hayes' Only Surviving Child Dies

Lewiston, Me., March 19 (U.P.)—Mrs. Frances Hayes, 83, only surviving child of Rutherford B. Hayes, the nation's 19th President, died at a nursing home here tonight after several months' illness.

Mrs. Hayes was born at the family home at Fremont, Ohio, where she will be buried Friday. She was divorced from her husband, Harry E. Smith, following World War I and resumed her maiden name.

Senator Asserts Country Would Be Better Off Without Secretary

By The Associated Press

Senator Joseph McCarthy (R., Wis.) said yesterday the country would be better off if Dean Acheson were ousted as Secretary of State.

"I think the situation would be infinitely improved if not only Acheson but the whole (State Department) ring of 'untouchables' were out," McCarthy declared.

The Wisconsin lawmaker made this statement in reply to a question on a television program (NBC).

Repeating his charges that the State Department is a haven for Communists and other bad security risks, McCarthy said he is convinced that "we still have most of the Hiss ring" in the State Department.

He was referring to Alger Hiss, former State Department official who was convicted on a charge that he lied when he denied having given secret United States documents to a courier for Russia.

Doubts If Hiss Was at Top

In reply to another question, McCarthy said he does not believe that Hiss was "the top man in the espionage ring" which he declared still exists in the department.

Asked whether the "top man" still is in the department, McCarthy replied that there are "several extremely dangerous men" still in the department.

Attorney General McGrath, meanwhile, was reported objecting strenuously yesterday against any decision to open the FBI's secret files to Senators hunting Communists in the State Department.

As a result, an Administration official who asked not to be quoted by name said there is a sharp division of opinion among President Truman's advisers over whether complete loyalty records should be made available to a Senate Foreign Relations sucommittee investigating charges by McCarthy.

This official said one possible result could be an order by President Truman to open State Department and Civil Service loyalty records—but not the FBI's files—to the investigators.

No Decision by Truman

It was stressed that no decision has been made by the President, although Chairman Tydings (D., Md.) of the inquiry group was reported to have been given to understand previously that none of the records would be denied.

Heretofore the President has refused to let congressional committees see any of the loyalty files.

McCarthy, who has accused the State Department of harboring Communists, has contended that his charges can't be proved or disproved until all the records—including those of the FBI—are examined by the committee.

If any of them are withheld, he is almost certain to charge that an attempt is being made to "whitewash" the State Department.

McCarthy mailed to the committee Saturday the names of 81 persons whose cases he outlined to

Viet Namese Riot, Rip U. S. Flag in Protesting Ships

Saigon, Viet Nam, Indo-China, March 19 (AP).—Students and workmen carrying the gold-starred flag of Ho Chi Minh's Moscow-backed Viet Namese rioted for four hours today in a demonstration against the presence of two American destroyers in the harbor.

Estimates of the wounded ran as high as 80 but no dead were reported immediately.

The 4000 demonstrators occupied the market place and burned it down before they were dispersed by French police using tear gas. Repeated volleys were fired, but French sources said police fired over the heads of the rioters. The French said about 20 shots were fired at police.

The rioters tore down French and American flags hoisted to honor the destroyers Stickell and Anderson, and ripped them to pieces. They burned 15 buses and trucks, which they overturned to form barricades in the litter-strewn streets.

Spikes Resignation Rumor

Defense Chief Will Hew to Line In Armed Forces 'Fat' Trim

By the United Press

Defense Secretary Louis Johnson said yesterday he is determined to press his drive to eliminate "fat" from the military budget and at the same time increase the combat power of the armed forces.

The defense chief made the statement in an interview reviewing his first stormy year in the office that contributed to the death of the late James V. Forrestal. He said flatly he is going through with his economy program despite all criticism.

"National security first, economy second," he said.

Johnson said the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force agree with him that 13 million dollars is the most that should be—or needs to be—spent on defense during the new fiscal year. This amount, he said, "will not wreck the American economy."

"We therefore will oppose efforts to cut the 13 billion dollars and at the same time we have no plans to ask for increases over that amount."

Army, Navy and Air Force spending was running at the rate of about 15 billion dollars when Johnson became Defense Secretary last March 28.

Johnson spiked rumors that he would resign soon.

Half of Farm Loans Go to Seven States

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

More than half of the 2310 million dollars lent by Uncle Sam to the Nation's farmers in 1949 went to seven States. These figures do not include Government purchases—also part of the farm price program. Purchases amounted to 1743 million dollars last year, almost as much as the loan program.

Two States hit the quarter of a billion mark—in loans—both of them notoriously boastful of their wealth and independence. They are Texas and Iowa.

Texas, with its tremendous income from oil, natural gas and other similar resources, topped the rest as it tops them in area. It took down 277 million dollars in crop loans.

229 Million on Iowa Corn

Right behind Texas came Iowa, much smaller but more highly productive, agriculturally, per acre. Iowa borrowed 250 million from Uncle Sam, to furnish cash to its Cadillac-riding tillers of the soil. Of this a terrific 229 million was borrowed on corn, alone.

This year Iowa probably will get a chance to borrow on its other "biggest" crop—a crop that goes with corn like ham goes with eggs—hogs. Although price supports for hogs are left to the discretion of Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan in the new farm law, he is expected to set a support figure effective next month. Hogs last week sold in Chicago below the support price of $16.65. The week's market range was $15.75 to $16.85.

Brannan's position is reported to be that it is unfair to support corn at a mandatory 90 percent of parity and not support hogs which are made out of corn. Such a program, he feels, would discourage raising hogs. The Government is interested in increasing the Nation's livestock and meat output.

Kansas Ranks Third

Texas and Iowa were the only States that borrowed more than 175 million last year. Kansas, the Nation's No. 1 wheat State, with a total of 167 million dollars in loans, was a poor third. Kansas borrowed 131 million on wheat, 15 million on corn and 20 million on miscellaneous crops.

Nebraska topped all in proportion to population. Nebraska farmers got 139 million dollars. That is equal to $107 for each person in the State.

The seven States that got the lion's share of Government loans—1165 million out of the 2310 million total—included, besides Texas, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska:

Illinois, 116 million, or only $13 per capita.

Oklahoma, 112 million, or $47.50 per capita.

Maryland got more than twice as much in Government loans on farm crops last year than Virginia in spite of the great difference in size.

The figures are:

Maryland, total $10,614,000, divided as follows: $4,809,000 on wheat; $637,000 on corn; $5,093,000 on tobacco, and $73,802 miscellaneaus.

Virginia, total $4,681,000, divided as follows: wheat, $1,784,000; corn, $73,694; cotton, $328,414; tobacco, $1,758,746; and miscellaneous.

Omnibus Money Bill Battle to Open Today

out what the committee is going to do. We are not out to wreck essential services."

Martin said he would call a full conference of all Republican House members before the bill goes to the floor.

Appropriations Chairman Cannon said the bill already has been cut by the subcommittees and the new eight-man "central committee" more deeply than any appropriations in his memory.

"We used spending this year as a ceiling, rather than the 1951 estimates, and for the first time have cut under both," he told The Washington Post.

A 27-to-18 Democratic majority in the committee normally okays subcommittee money bills with few changes but the new "eleven bills rolled into one" venture faces many a pitfall.

Each of the 11 "chapters" in the giant measure will be first open to committee amendments. Later they will be a wide-open economy target on the House floor.

The key test, however, won't come until the end of House floor consideration, possibly just before the House leaves on a 10-day Easter recess, April 6.

At that point Representative Taber will be recognized to present a "recommit" motion, proposing an over-all slash. For most members that will be the focal economy vote of the session. Republicans will vote solidly for the motion and Democrats will find it more difficult than ever to hold their lines.

Some economy-bloc Democrats have already conferred informally with Taber, offering to support his motion if he names a "reasonable, non-political" figure.

Taber thus far has declined to make any commitments, may supply the first clew to the GOP goals when he submits test amendments to the Appropriations Committee today.

Stimulated by public discussion of the Hoover Committee recommendations, economy and efficiency in Government have become probably the campaign's hottest twinned issues.

Within the last 10 days the House has twice demonstrated that it may swing a meat ax. On March 9 it licked a previously non-controversial public library demonstration bill, "to save money." And on March 16 it killed a 240 million dollar mining aid bill for the same reason.

With Congress in that mood, veteran legislators say anything could happen to the omnibus bill, dramatizing as it must the whole subject of spending.

Cannon's time-table on the bill calls for an initial full committee closed session on the measure at 10 a. m. today. When the House meets at noon, the committee will recess until after the House acts on the pending conference agreement on the so-called "urgent deficiency" bill.

Then, at 2 p. m. the full committee will go back to work on the "single package" measure. If there aren't any flare-ups or major upsets, the committee conceivably could complete action today. But if it fails to act on all 11 "chapters," daily sessions will be called until if does.

Cannon hopes to report the bill to the House by Thursday noon.

The omnibus money bill reform was pioneered in the Senate by Senator Harry Flood Byrd (D., Va.), and pushed independently in the House by Cannon. It was originally designed to wrap all appropriations into one bundle, so Congress could see the whole fiscal picture, but some major items will be omitted from the first House draft.

For example, about three billion dollars asked by President Truman for continuation of the Marshall Plan can't be included until Congress passes legislation authorizing the sum. Nor are about nine billion dollars in so-called permanent appropriations and trust funds expected to be in the bill. Including such uncuttable items as interest on the debt, the so-called "permanents" wouldn't be an economy target in any event.

One sobering reality that may give pause to the economy drive is the fact that the biggest single items in the omnibus bill are for programs almost equally sacrosanct in Congress—national defense and veterans.

Indonesia Devalues Guilder 50%, Seizes Cash as 'Loan'

Jakarta, U. S. I., March 19 (AP).—The United States of Indonesia devalued the currency by 50 percent today and seized half of all cash and bank accounts over 1000 guilders as a government loan.

(The guilder was quoted in the United States recently at about 26 cents.)

An ordinance of the Finance Ministry said all paper Indonesian guilders in circulation will lose half their value as legal tender. All banks and pay offices in the country are to be closed until March 22. After that they will reopen and exchange old money for new banknotes at one half the face value until April 16.

Indonesia thus became the thirty-fifth nation to devalue since Great Britain cut the value of the pound by 30.5 percent last September 18.

Finance Minister Sjafroddein said in a radio explanation half of all money held as cash or in bank accounts "will be regarded by the government as a public loan," bearing 3 percent interest.

Besides supplying the government with needed revenue, Sjafroeddin said, the government hopes the new measures will:

1. End strikes by holding wages at the same level with prices falling.
2. End confusion caused by having both U. S. I. money and money of the old Idonesian republic in circulation.
3. Increase foreign confidence in Indonesia in financial and economic matters.

Johnson Stands Pat on 'Trim'

job," he said. "I intend to stay until it is finished or until President Truman tells me I am no longer needed." President Truman has indicated that he is pleased with the job Johnson is doing.

Johnson said that his double-barreled program of economy and unification of the armed services is progressing satisfactorily.

"The Nation's defenses are far better than a year ago and getting better all the time," he said. "The Army, Navy and Air Force now are more alert and in a better state of combat readiness than they have been since demobilization." But, he quickly added, "there is much still to be desired."

Johnson said his economy program was based on eliminating waste and duplication, getting uniformed personnel from behind desks and into combat jobs, and buying new military equipment with part of the savings.

He praised the three services for the manner in which they are carrying out the program.

The Defense Secretary will be out of the country on international duties on the anniversary of his swearing-in. He has called a meeting of the North Atlantic Defense Committee, of which he is chairman, in The Hague April 1.

The most controversial member of President Truman's post-election cabinet, Johnson found much of the past 12 months tumultuous. His dismissal of 163,000 civilian employes, closing down of military installations, and reductions in sizes of the armed services have evoked criticism—often bitter—from Congress, ranking officers of the Navy and the press.

But he has stuck to his guns.

After being sworn in at the most elaborate ceremony ever held for a Cabinet member, Johnson warned the top brass at the Pentagon either to get wholeheartedly behind unification or get out.

Former Navy Secretary John L. Sullivan, Admiral Louis E. Denfeld, Rear Admiral Joel Boone and Navy Capt. John G. Crommelin are proof he meant it.

Pravda Writer Hits Acheson Proposals

On 2 'Spheres'

Tito Aide Alleges Red, British Deal

Belgrade, March 19 (AP).—Moshe Pijade, member of Premier Marshal Tito's eight-man Politburo, charged today that Britain and Russia agreed in 1944 to divide their spheres of influence in Yugoslavia on a 50-50 basis.

His charge was made before an outdoor mass meeting—in advance of the country's general elections next Sunday—the first since the present Parliament was elected in 1945. There is only one ticket.

Pijade cited the alleged British-Russian agreement in an appeal for national unity. He said the British became angry at Yugoslavia when they saw they would realize nothing from their 50 percent share of the agreement. He added the Russians expected to get 100 percent.

(In London, a British Foreign Office spokesman declined comment on Pijade's claim. He said any appropriate comment must await a study of the text of Pijade's speech.)

Pijade saw the alleged agreement as the root from which the ultimate break between the Soviet-led Comminform and Yugoslavia sprung.

He said when the Russians failed to get their share of the agreement, they ordered passage of the Comminform resolution.

Pijade discounted Russian claims it had liberated Yugoslavia and had furnished Yugoslavia with major wartime aid. On the contrary, he said, Yugoslavia furnished morale and military aid to the Russians as early as 1941 through its revolt against German occupation.

"Slanderers can slander us," Pijade said in an obvious reference to Russia. "They can imagine that they are only culture bearers, only tailors of socialism. But they should not expect their conceit to be exported and to become theory."

Moscow, March 19 (AP).—The Russians threw more cold water today on United States Secretary of State Dean Acheson's proposal to end the cold war.

Soviet Commentator Y. Viktorov, writing in Pravda, organ of the Communist Party, rediculed Acheson's seven suggestions for Russia to follow in ending the tension between the USSR and the United States.

(Acheson, who outlined his seven-point program in a speech Thursday at Berkeley, Calif., said at the time he did not believe Russia would accept the proposals).

"All Mr. Acheson's utterances," wrote Viktorov, "prove one and the same thing: that he has no concrete proposals whatsoever which are aimed at supporting the consolidating of peace."

(Acheson's proposals included Soviet cooperation in writing peace treaties with Germany, Austria and Japan, less Soviet obstructionism in the United Nations, withdrawal of Russian troops from satellite states of eastern Europe, effective control of atomic energy and an end to international communism).

Viktorov described Acheson's references to "total diplomacy" as "a diplomacy relying on sheer force and resorting to methods of pressure and intimidation, the method of threats." He aserted "total diplomacy" did not differ from "atomic diplomacy."

The Pravda writer said the Acheson speech showed that total diplomacy "signifies not only the continuation but even the intensification of the aggressive line in United States foreign policy." Viktorov said Acheson had been unsuccessful in attempting to present United States policy as "a peace policy."

Viktorov said what Acheson's speech really showed is that "the aggressive, adventurous course of United States foreign policy aimed at unleashing a new war is causing acute alarm among a wide strata of the American people."

"Every year," he added, "the Soviet government puts forward proposals aimed at supporting and consolidating peace and capable of ensuing the security of the nations and universal peace."

3000 Germans May Be Given Trip to U. S.

By The Associated Press

The State Department plans to bring about 3000 Germans to the United States next fiscal year as part of a stepped-up campaign to sell democracy in West Germany.

Congress is being asked to earmark about seven million dollars for this out of a 30-million-dollar budget for American occupation expenses in West Germany in the year beginning July 1.

The visitors will be mostly officials of the West German Republic, editors, teachers, legislators, union leaders, students and agriculture, food, legal and health experts.

About 2500 West Germans will have visited the United States during the year ending this July 1 to observe American democracy first hand. The cost was five million dollars.

State Department officials report there has been a big increase in the number of private American organizations desiring to help out on the program.

Generally, cooperation takes the form of paying the expenses of visiting Germans and guiding their tours.

Army Department officials are also planning to expand the number of visits by Austrians to the United States to counteract Russian propaganda.

Thousands See Nonpolitical Frankfurt Fair

Frankfurt, Germany, March 19 (AP).—Western Germany opened a spring fair today, pointedly avoiding the political trappings of the Soviet zone's recent Leipzig fair.

Tens of thousands of spectators milling through the fairgrounds found no western counterpart of Leipzig's red stars and flags and printed quotations from Joseph Stalin.

Only the horizontally-striped black, red and gold flag of the Federal republic flew atop the tallest exposition hall.

United States High Commissioner John J. McCloy, opening the fair with Federal President Theodor Heuss, lauded the absence of political propaganda and paraphernalia.

The Frankfurt fair, largest in Germany since the war, attracted 4154 exhibitors, including 1139 from foreign lands. There were a few exhibits from eastern Germany, but none from Russia or her satellites.

Italy had the largest foreign display with 303 exhibits. It was followed by Yugoslavia with 300, France with 191, Switzerland with 128, Belgium with 95 and the Netherlands with 53.

Other exhibitors included Sweden and Denmark, for the first time since the war, and England, Austria, the Saarland and the United States.

The throng of spectators discovered a number of items described as postwar inventions.

These included former United States Army jeeps adapted as passenger cars and light trucks. Other exhibits ranged from collapsible skis to a veteranarian's instrument to aid birth deliveries by large animals.

Nations Involved in Caribbean Squabble . . .

cials and overthrow the government.

The plotters, according to the committee, got $2000 through an official of the Dominican embassy in the Haitian capital, and also had the cooperation of other Dominican officials. The committee's conclusion was that the Trujillo government had "not satisfactorily" kept watch over the activities of plotters on its soil.

Haiti, of course, was completely exonerated.

The second case involved a bigger plot, hatched among Domonican exiles in Cuba, to invade the Dominican Republic and get rid of the Trujillo regime. In 1947, the committee said, more than 1000 men were publicly recruited and trained in Cuba for this purpose.

They had between 12 and 14 planes, guns, bazookas and hundreds of rifles and machine guns concentrated at Cayo Confites. This concentration, the committee said, "could not have been accomplished without full knowledge on the part of the Cuban civil and military authorities."

Two months after getting a Dominican protest the Cuban government seized this arsenal and arrested some of the conspirators. But some of the arrested men were freed and are "still continuing their activities in an open manner," the committee found, and a part of their armament was sent across the border to Gautemala.

There is proof, the committee reported, that Guatemalan military authorities facilitated the delivery of these arms. Some of them were taken later to Cozumel, in Mexican territory, in two DC-3 planes belonging to the Guatemalan air force, in readiness for the projected sea-air invasion of the Dominican Republic.

The Dominicans also charged that the Cuban Red Cross was preparing an airfield near l'Amalie, in eastern Cuba, for use in the proposed invasion. The committee cleared the Red Cross of this charge, ut it named Col. Rodolfo Henriquez, a Cuban of Dominican origin, now the head of the Red Cross, as the protector of anti-Trujillo plotters on Cuban soil. It also accused his brother, Enrico Henriquez, a member of the Cuban Chamber of Deputies.

Recently, the committee went on, the Cuban Red Cross began acquiring a Catalina plane, a light launch, and other military-type equipment "clearly inappropriate for use by a Red Cross organization," and leased one of the airfields used by the 1947 conspirators.

The committee asked the Cuban and Dominican Red Cross organizations to request an investigation by the International Red Cross at Geneva, a request which the Cuban Red Cross had previously made on its own.

Summing up the present situation, the committee concluded that:

". . . even if the so-called 'Legion of the Caribbean' does not exist as a concrete military organization bearing that particular name; nevertheless there is in existence a collection of elements constituting a subversive force, less organized and systematized than the hypothetical Legion, but more dangerous and more apt to create serious warlike situations."

Five Draft Resolutions

To prevent further trouble, the committee listed five draft resolutions for submission to the O. A. S. Council.

The first of them warns that any repeition of the disturbances will bring the sanctions provided by the Rio Treaty.

The second calls upon the Dominican government to take "immediate and effective steps to prevent official functionaries from tolerating, instigating, stimulating, aiding or fomenting subversive and seditious movements against other governments."

The third tells the Dominican Government to comply strictly with its 1949 treaty with Haiti, which curbs revolutionary activities in one republic against the other.

The fourth tells the Cuban and Guatemalan governments to prevent the existence on their territories of "groups of nationals or foreigners, militarily organized, for the deliberate purpose of conspiring against the security of other countries."

The fifth and last tells these two governments to control war material "which is or has been in the hands of revolutionary elements" and to stop illegal traffic in arms.

The committee also recommends setting up a permanent five-man watchdog group to guard against future trouble.

Hemisphere Council Opens Session Today

The governments of the American republics will start a new effort today to examine the economic problems of Latin America, and especially the development of its economic resources.

The occasion will be the formal opening here of a special session of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council, Finance ministers and other high officials of the hemisphere republics will be in the delegations. Among them will be Ramon Careijo, Argentina's minister of the treasury, who has come to Washington in the hope of strengthening the economic position fo hte Peron regime.

Argentina and some other Latin American governments are expected to argue that the United States has neglected Latin America in its economic aid programs, and should provide bigger government loans or grants in the future.

The United States will answer that this country has given more than half a billion dollars in direct loans, and much more in indirect aid, to Latin America since the war, but that further assistance depends largely on the Latin American governments and peoples themselves.

Assistant Secretary of State Edward G. Miller, jr., who returned only last week from visiting South American capitals, has said "the main job" must be done by private capital, and that capital will not flow unless the Latin American countries create a "favorale climate" for its investment.

Miller himself will head the United States delegation.

One of the announced purposes of the conference will be to consider a coordinated program of technical assistance in the Americas, in line with Point Four of President Truman's inaugural address last year.

Wallace Denies Leak to Nazis Attributed to Him by Leahy

South Salem, N. Y., March 19 (AP)—Henry A. Wallace today denied a statement by Adm. William D. Leahy indicating that the former Vice President unwittingly leaked wartime secrets to Nazi Germany.

Leahy, in his book, "I Was There," to be published Monday, said that in January, 1944, President Roosevelt received an intelligence report indicating the Germans were getting secret U. S. assessments of Russia through Wallace "by way of Switzerland." He said it would not have been of much military value.

Leahy writes that the report to the late President came from the Office of Strategic Services. He quoted it as saying the information reached Germany by this route: from Wallace "in the greatest confidence" to his brother-in-law, Charles Bruggman, Swiss Minister to Washington, who in turn transmitted it to Switzerland. From there, the report said, the information leaked into Berlin.

Wallace flatly denied the statement at his home here today.

"It happens I know more about this incident than Admiral Leahy," the Progressive Party leader said. "The Swiss Minister never had any of the conversations with me attributed to him by the German report quoted in Admiral Leahy's book."

Wallace indicated a belief that the OSS report may have been based on information intentionally planted by the Nazi counter-espionage system to attempt to drive a wartime wedge between Russia on one hand and Britain and the United States on the other.

Bruggman, still Swiss Minister in Washington, previously denied any such leakage.

Everything at Steak!

by Albert Parchey Mesirow

ANYONE who remembers Schneider's Restaurant when it was located at 8th and L sts. SE., raise his hand. Anyone who can remember the gas-operated, belt-drive ceiling fans that kept Schneider's customers "cool" in 1906, step forward and receive a gold star! Warren Payne, who has been one of our best waiters here for going-on 10 years, served Schneider's for 38 years, and told us all about the old days. Payne says that people ate more then, and that Schneider's did a booming business in breakfast steaks. The "Washington Crab Feast" originated there. Payne's favorite customer was the late, retired Senate Sergeant-at-Arms, C. W. Jurney. "There was a man who really knew seafood," Payne says. "He could tell the age and tenderness of a lobster by just looking at it, and he knew the family tree of every crab ever pulled out of the Chesapeake!" Warren says that in those days, as today, a majority of people preferred steaks. "But Schneider's steaks weren't ever as good as these we serve," he swears.

My Aunt Adeline, who manages to keep up with the outside world although living in St. Louis, is an uncompromising fundamentalist, full of distrust for such fripperies as pate de foi gras, truffles and especially garlic, which she calls "foreign" and therefore undesirable if not positively wicked.

Aunt Adeline's aversion to garlic stems from a very trying 15 minutes spent in an overcrowded St. Louis street car during the 1907 Columbian Exposition The car happened to be full of exuberant Italian tourists, enroute to their country's exhibit, and Aunt Adeline was literally "caught in the middle." It took her four blocks past her destination to fight her way through that garrulous mass of "foreigners," each joyfully exuding the aroma of his favorite national flavoring.

"What this country needs," writes Aunt Adeline, "is a good, home-cooked meal at least twice a day. Too many people running around, eating out of boxes and cans and neglecting their homes and children. I'll bet that spy, what's his name, would never have stolen those secrets if his wife had fed him home-fried potatoes, summer squash and a good, thick steak every day for supper!" And then she added, "Without garlic!"

steaks! steaks! steaks!

The arguments pro and con garlic go on and on. There isn't any "right" or "wrong" to this argument. Garlic is a matter of taste. Some people like it and some people don't.

But there is one rule that should be followed in using garlic. A very wise man laid it down. He said, "When you wish that the chef had used just a tiny bit more garlic, your dish has been perfectly seasoned!"

Restraint, that's the idea whenever you use garlic. Incidentally, do you know where the name "garlic" originated? It's from an old Saxon word, "gar," meaning a lance, or spearhead. The leaves of the garlic plant are spear-shaped, and when the Saxons first discovered this delightful seasoning in the course of traversing the Mediterranean countries during a Crusade, they were fascinated by its delicate flavor.

Italians, who are notably free, as a nation, from gastric ulcers, attribute this happy state to their lavish use of garlic and olive oil. Whether or not there is any scientific basis for this belief, I can't say.

From a chef's viewpoint, I know that the combination of garlic and olive oil is a wonder-worker on steaks. Before broiling, a fine steak is lightly seasoned with garlic, and then smeared with olive oil. The oil keeps the juices in, and the result is a mouth-watering treat fit for kings!

Try it some time. Come in to Parchey's (got the address? corner 19th and K Sts. N.W.) and ask for a garlic-and-olive-oil Sirloin. We'll fix it up specially for you, and I'll promise that if you like garlic, you'll love the way we use it!

Ship's Captain Sends Apology To Elder Crew

Pearl Harbor, March 19 (AP).—The captain of the military transport General A. W. Brewster radioed regrets today for missing distress signals from the fire-ravaged Navy net tender Elder.

The Elder's 40 men were rescued Friday, four days after the Brewster passed them in mid-Pacific near Eniwetok Island. Twenty-six of them were plucked from life rafts and the others were found aboard the drifting ship, where they had subdued a three-day fire.

Lieut. William F. Adams, the Elder's commander, said his crew fired guns and flares and used every available signal device in vain efforts to attract the Brewster last Monday. The fire had knocked out the radio.

The Brewster's captain, whose name is not known here, sent this message to Pearl Harbor for relay to Lieutenant Adams:

"Deeply regret our failure to see any distress signal as claimed by Elder when passed at sea. All aboard Brewster sincerely thankful that all hands reported safe."

The Elder is being towed 2000 miles back to Pearl Harbor by the salvage ship Deliver. She is due March 29.

Superforts For Britain Leave Today

The first four B-29 Superfortresses supplied to England under the North Atlantic arms aid program will take off for the British Isles today at 3:30 p. m. from Andrews Field, the Defense Department announced last night.

Sir Oliver Franks, British Ambassador, and Louis Johnson, Defense Secretary, will speak in a ceremony at 3 p. m. at the air base. Congressional leaders and State Department representatives also will be on hand.

American officials refused to comment on the total number of B-29s to be delivered to the R.A.F., but British sources have estimated the number at 70 to 80. The aircraft will be equipped with "modernized" postwar engines and "bristle with American arms.

American crews from the Strategic Air Command will fly the planes to England. The 50 fliers will remain abroad temporarily to instruct R. A. F. Bomber Command personnel.

The B-29s came to Andrews Field from Warren Robbins Field, Ga., where they were outfitted.

like a nut. I learned to hate her when we were in the sixth grade and ever since then this has built up."

Deputy Sheriff J. W. Ripperdan said Alice unhesitatingly described how she groped through the dark house at 3 a. m., found the rifle, loaded it, then felt for her sister's head on the pillow and fired a bullet into her brain.

Ripperdan said investigation showed Alice suffered an obsession that her sister was the favored one.

The slaying occurred shortly after the twins came home from baby sitting at a neighbor's and while their parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Richard, were asleep on a sleeping porch. Richard is a plumbing supply salesman.

Mrs. Richard told officers she was awakened when she heard Alice dialing the telephone in an inside room. There was an extension beside the mother's bed, and she lifted the receiver to hear Alice say, "Come to 4721 Harvey Avenue, there's been a murder."

Then Mrs. Richards broke in:

"Don't get too hasty. This girl walks in her sleep once in awhile. She's having a nightmare now."

A few moments later the phone in the sheriff's office rang again and this time Mrs. Richard's voice said: "It's true. Come to 4721 Harvey Avenue right away."

Alice is being held in Juvenile Home. Ripperdan said a murder charge would be placed against her Monday.

palace to the fifth King of Belgium." The fifth King would be Leopold's 19-year-old son, Prince Baudouin.

To Maintain Pressure

A Socialist leader said "turning strikes" would take place "until a satisfactory solution is reached." By turning strikes he meant that 24-hour strikes throughout the country, one after another, will be called to maintain constant pressure on the King to abdicate.

The liberals caused the government to collapse when they refused to go along with the Social Christians in calling a joint session of the two houses of Parliament to invite Leopold to return to his throne in the wake of last Sunday's advisory plebiscite. In that poll Leopold won 57.68 percent of the vote.

The Liberals stood by their prereferendum position that the king should have a majority in all three major divisions of the country—the Flemish-speaking north, the French-speaking south, and the Brussels central area. Leopold won a heavy majority in the north, but failed in the other two sections.

The king, who had promised to abdicate if he failed to receive 55 percent of the vote, cannot return until there is a government that will call a joint session of Parliament to repeal the 1945 law creating the regency of his brother.

Nationalists Throw Flame At Hainan Island Guerillas

Taipei, Formosa, March 19 (U.P.)—The Chinese Nationalists followed up their landings on the mainland today with an all-out campaign to destroy Hainan Island guerillas through the use of firebombs and flame throwers.

Government quarters kept silent on activities of the army troops who landed 200 miles south of Shanghai under cover of heavy naval bombardment and captured the coastal city of Sungmen. It was believed the landings marked the start of a Nationalist campaign to build up mainland underground activities.

Reports from Hongkong said an estimated 10,000 Communists were virtually encircled on Hainan Island, off the south coast of China, and appeared doomed by a ring of fire surrounding their hideouts. The air force joined in the attack, dropping incendiary bombs.

Official sources said the Sungmen landing occurred on March 15th instead of the 18th, but the government kept secret the number of men actually ashore or purpose of the raids.

Navy Unveils Aerial Lab for Blind Flying

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Naval Air Test Center, Patuxent, Md., March 19—The Navy today unveiled its new flying laboratory "Delta"—a converted transport with a vital future mission.

The major assignment of the rebuilt Douglas airliner is to test and help perfect blind flying techniques that will enable carrier planes to take off from land or flattop decks around the clock in all sorts of weather.

For these major changes in warfare and world conditions make such all-weather, continuous flight operations essential.

(1) The major theater of operations in a future war probably will be fog-bound North Atlantic and Arctic waters rather than the sunny South Pacific.

(2) New-type snorkel subs will require more constant and pains-taking aircraft searches, with improved detection gear that does not depend so much on visual sighting as before.

(3) The advent of jet carrier aircraft—with higher speed but lesser fuel capacity—makes it highly important that night and bad-weather landing operations be speeded up.

Naval airmen pointed up these requirements in demonstrating the new flying laboratory for newsmen. It is known as the "Delta Project" as the earlier—and smaller—commercial planes fitted out as all-weather test aircraft were known as "Alpha," "Beta" and "Gamma."

The Douglas R4D transport plane, Navy counterpart of the commercial DC-3, has had its cockpit and most of the cabin remodeled to make a true "laboratory aloft." All radio dials and switches have been taken from the panel and put in a console between the pilot and co-pilot.

The entire panel or "dashboard" has been revamped and a removable section added. This will permit a succession of new instruments to be installed for test without sending the airplane to the shop for modification each time.

The forward half of the cabin has been converted into a workshop.

Now undergoing test are new omni-range receivers and distance measuring equipment (DME). By sending and receiving signals from ground stations, the pilot can tell his exact position at all times, and guide himself through fog or darkness or to the glide path beam of the standard Instrument Landing System now installed at major airports.

What the Navy is after is a modified ILS, omni-range and DME system for installation on carriers and carrier aircraft. This would replace present radio equipment for bringing back planes, and supplement "carrier control approach" (shipboard GCA) for landing them in fog.

Comdr. R. E. Laub, chief of the all-weather aids department at the test center here, believes that a "semiautomatic" system for bringing in carrier planes is practicable, with the landing signal officer still functioning for the final let-down directions.

It was his first writing attempt, and a pulp magazine bought it for $400.

School Construction Bill Raises Varied Problems

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

How many—if any—children in the United States are being deprived of learning because of lack of a school building?

Should Federal funds be used to aid States in building schools if need is established, or can the the States themselves better afford such construction than the Federal Government?

These questions are only a suggestion of the issues facing a House Education and Labor subcommittee now wrestling with the problem of a school construction bill.

The subcommittee, comprised of Chairman Wingate H. Lucas (D., Tex.), and Representatives Thomas H. Burke (D., O.), Roy W. Wier (D., Minn.), Carroll D. Kearns (R., Pa.) and Thomas H. Werdel (R., Calif.) will meet again today for another try at an approach to the knotty problem.

Letters to Seek Data

At today's meeting the subcommittee will consider a suggestion by Kearns that a letter to the Commissioners of Education in all the States be drafted to find out specific needs in school construction. An attempt is expected to be made to agree upon a letter which will express what the committee wants to know.

If the suggestion is adopted, public hearings in Washington with governors or commissioners of education from all the States may be held.

There is no dearth of generalized information on the need for more school construction.

The Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare has found that "many thousands of children, possibly one-fourth of the total enrollment, are now housed in obsolete, unsafe or inadequate buildings."

Estimates of Needs

The committee states that "about 450,000 new classrooms and related facilities will be needed altogether within the next 10 years to house the public schools satisfactorily.

The Council of State Governments has this to say:

"According to estimates made by the States, adequate housing of the public schools will require new construction of 440,000 to 480,000 classrooms, with accompanying facilities costing altogether between $9,000,000,000 and $11,500,000,000."

The National Education Association:

"Over half the States have reported a 'very large' shortage of city elementary-school buildings, and about one-fourth of the States a 'very large' shortage of rural elementary-school buildings."

Plenty of Interest Shown

An extremely comprehensive report entitled "Financing Public School Construction" prepared by Charles A. Quattlebaum, education analyst of the Legislative Reference Service, Library of Congress, calls attention to the fact that not counting measures providing only for long-range planning, at least 43 bills proposing Federal financial assistance for the construction of public elementary and secondary schools were introduced in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress. If proof were needed of Congressional interest in this subject, here it is.

Reports from the Bureau of the Census forecast an increase of population in the United States from an estimated 147,947,000 on October 1, 1949 to between 154,699,000 and 155,745,000 on July 1, 1953.

By 1955 an increase of about 4,246,000 or 35 percent over the 1947 population is expected in the 5-to-9-year age group, and an increase of 3,246,000 or 30 percent in the 10 to 14-year-age group. And even now more children are enrolled in the elementary schools than ever before in history.

Financial Ability Varies

There is of course, great difference in the ability of various States to support school systems.

Quattlebaum notes that "within recent years there has been a growing tendency on the part of State governments to share with the localities the cost of providing school buildings and equipment. Data obtained from a survey by the United States Office of Education in 1948 and more recent sources of information show that at least 20 States now grant some financial assistance to school districts for this purpose."

The first question is, once more, that granted school facilities are inadequate are children actually not getting any education because of no school buildings and if so where?

Poverty Poses Question

And if a community is too poor to provide even a one-room school, is not the situation one whcih even Federal aid on a school building can't solve?

In other words, what about the nourishment and health of children in a community as handicapped as that? Are the children getting sufficient food in such a community that they would be able to take advantage of "learning" if it were offered?

And again, question two at the beginning of this article has yet to be answered to the satisfaction of all members of the subcommittee.

How much can the States do for themselves? And should not the pressure now being exerted upon the Congress, be exerted by the citizens in their own local communities first?

Secret Signal?

New evidence in the United Mine Workers contempt case has come to light in Canton, Ill. It is not yet possible to say what the evidence is worth, for Lloyd H. Sidener's claim that John L. Lewis secretly ordered the miners to ignore the February 11 court order to end their strike has been flatly denied. Mr. Sidener says that he has been removed as president of Local 7445 at Canton, fined $50,000 and in effect barred from working as punishment for his efforts to get the miners to obey the court's back-to-work order. It is not impossible that he is striking back at the UMW heads on flimsy evidence. Bernard Beasley, who is accused of having passed along Mr. Lewis' alleged secret signal ("the whistle blew once for Monday"), denies that he received or relayed any secret orders. The desirability of sifting out the truth is obvious.

The contempt case against the UMW is now before the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Attorneys for the Government have conceded that the UMW officials attempted in good faith to send the men back to work, and, of course, the case will be argued on that basis. No new evidence that may be brought to light can be considered in connection with this appeal. That is just as well, for the country ought to have an authoritative ruling on whether a union that flouts the orders of its officers and continues a strike in defiance of a court injunction is liable to punishment for contempt. If not, union irresponsibility will be greatly encouraged, and Congress will have to consider other means of coping with unauthorized strikes that create a national emergency.

At the same time there is need to run down every clew suggesting a concerted effort within the UMW to hoodwink the court. Mr. Sidener has taken his plea to the NLRB. The Department of Justice, too, ought to be on the alert. The fact that the present case has gone to the Court of Appeals on the assumption that the UMW officials acted with sincerity does not minimize the importance of evidence suggesting the opposite. If the executive branch does not get the full facts, a congressional inquiry may be necessary.

Chronic Unemployment

Unemployment reached a postwar peak of 4,684,000 in February—an increase of 200,000 over the January level. The February rise was not due to the coal strike, which had had little effect on general employment when the survey was made, and strikers are counted as employed since they have regular jobs. As a matter of fact, total civilian employment in February was only 215,000 less than a year ago, although the number of the unemployed was 1,463,000 higher. Furthermore, while agricultural employment in February was well below the level of February last year, 556,000 more workers were employed by nonagricultural industries.

What is the explanation of this mounting unemployment at a time when business is prospering and employment is at high levels? The answer is that the growth of population is outstripping the capacity of agriculture and industry to absorb the influx of newcomers into the labor market. The rise in unemployment between January and February, for instance, is mainly due to seasonal increases in the labor force, not to employment cutbacks, February being a month when a good many students leave school and begin to look for jobs.

Chronic unemployment is inevitable, unless such increases are accompanied by an expansion of industry to the extent required to provide jobs for the newcomers. Ewan Clague, head of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, says that if seasonal factors are allowed for, month-to-month figures point to a rising trend of unemployment since October, 1948. This means that chronic unemployment has become an actuality, rather than a mere threat, though it has not yet reached alarming proportions.

Another reason for the rise in unemployment is the increased productivity of labor brought about by postwar technological improvements that enable fewer workers to produce the same volume of goods. To arrest the rise of unemployment, therefore, industrial expansion will have to be stepped up sufficiently to allow not only for population growth but also for increases in worker productivity. Otherwise unemployment will continue to mount and before long the Government will undoubtedly come to the rescue of the jobless with pump-priming devices and make-work plans of various kinds.

To avert this danger American businessmen will have to bestir themselves to create more jobs by expanding markets for their products and aggressive exploration of new fields of enterprise. Many prosperous companies, for example, could well afford to reduce prices instead of charging all that the traffic will bear. Lower prices would increase sales and lead to higher production and more employment. These are stimuli of the kind required to convert a static economy into a dynamic one capable of providing full employment for a growing population. If private enterprise does not meet the challenge, the Government will take over where it leaves off.

Caribbean Blame

Frankness, rare in a diplomatic document, marks the report of the Caribbean investigating committee of the Organization of American States. It places specific responsibility on the Dominican Republic, Cuba and Guatemala for tolerating and abetting the spate of plotting in the Caribbean. In so doing it upholds Haiti's invocation of the Rio treaty against the Dominican Republic and deprecates Trujillo's countercharge against Haiti; by the same token it substantiates the Dominican complaints against Cuba and Guatemala for complicity in two would-be invasions. But the report is much more than a mere calling of a plague on all three houses; it consists of plain talk that will be difficult to shrug off.

With respect to the recent Haitian-Dominican feud, the report charges that the plot last December to assassinate the Haitian President had the knowledge and help of high Dominican officials. Particularly relevant is the fact that the chief supporter of the plot was a close friend of President Trujillo, and that the first secretary of the Dominican Embassy in Port au Prince paid $2000 to one of the plotters. Significantly, the Dominican charge d'affaires there—who fled to Washington and was appointed minister counselor here after the plot was quashed by Haitian police—refused to appear before the committee.

The other two instances of intended aggression involved attempts by persons on the other side of the political spectrum to unseat Dictator Trujillo. The first was the assembly of an invasionary force at Cayo Confites, Cuba, in the summer of 1947. The report asserts that the open recruiting and stockpiling of arms could not have been carried on "without full knowledge on the part of Cuban civil and military authorities." The Cuban minister of education, for example, was involved. The Cuban government, to be sure, finally broke up the expedition, but only after repeated protests, and, even then, many of the conspirators were later freed. The fact that Cuba has not returned a Dominican motor schooner captured by the revolutionaries remains a bone of contention. The report also casts a suspicious eye at some of the recent quasi-military efforts of the Cuban Red Cross, which is under control of Dominican exiles.

The only expedition actually to reach Dominican shores arrived at Luperon in June of 1949. A flying boat from Guatemala landed and three American pilots were killed in the skirmish. The expedition, though abortive, involved two Guatemalan army planes and two Mexican commercial planes interned by Mexico. Instigators of the invasion were Dominican exiles and the remnants of the Caribbean Legion; these, however, had active support of the Guatemalan government.

One of the factors in the Caribbean unrest, the investigation shows, is political exiles "deprived of democratic guarantees in their native lands." The committee calls for a study of measures to give effectiveness to the "principle of representative democracy." At the same time it deplores the double standard of morality by which nations or groups undertake by themselves to bring about such change.

It seems advisable that the Organ of Consultation should make its view clearly understood, that the principle of representative democracy set forth in the Charter does not authorize any state to violate its international commitments regarding nonintervention.

Perhaps the most meaningful of the report's recommendations is the establishment of a watchdog committee to insure compliance by the offending nations. It also calls for more effective limitation on the subversive activities of exiles and for strengthened control of illicit arms traffic—a control in which the United States ought to be especially interested. Finally it concludes with a slap at Trujillo's recent request for war powers. Such threats of force, it says, constitute "a violation of the essential norms of inter-American relationships."

Although the bluntness of the findings probably is causing considerable consternation in Ciudad Trujillo, Havana and Guatemala, the net effect of the report is to uphold the meaning and integrity of the inter-American system. We congratulate the committee on meeting its responsibility objectively and without temporizing, and we hope that the full Council of the Organization of American States will exhibit similar courage in following up the recommendations. If the responsibility for minor aggression is fixed decisively, the temptation for large-scale aggression is not likely to arise.

The Roosevelt Papers

Several Republicans have proposed that the personal and official papers of the late President Roosevelt be searched for further evidence in connection with the McCarthy accusations. A portion of these papers, consisting, it is said, of nearly five million separate documents, was made available last week to properly accredited "researchers, scholars and historians."

The question whether investigators for the Tydings subcommittee could be qualified under these terms is more or less irrelevant, since the documents in which Senators Ferguson and Brewster are interested are in that other portion of the collection—about 15 percent—which, according to the present plan, is to be kept even from the scrutiny of scholars until 1975. This segregation is explained on the grounds that the contents of these papers, if made public, might embarrass the relations of the United States with other nations or might do injury to the reputations of living persons. Access to these documents would require the approval of President Truman. This is something the committee is unlikely to ask as long as the Democratic members constitute the majority, and which it would be even more unlikely to obtain if it should ask.

Mr. Herman Kahn, director of the library, has been quoted as saying that he does not believe there is anything in the sequestrated documents "that would result in any revolutionary upheaval in respect to the history of the period." Presumably Mr. Kahn has examined the documents, and if his statement is to be accepted as a fair indication of their character then, of course, it would be a waste of time for the committee to bother about them.

All the documents in which the committee could have a legitimate interest would have been accumulated during Mr. Roosevelt's terms as President. This raises the question whether they are properly to be classified as personal or official papers, which, of course, cannot be answered until their contents are known. Thus we proceed to another question, which as a matter of fact, has been raised many times on this page, about the propriety of the practice among high Government officials of considering their accumulated files as personal property and so of removing them either before or at the end of their tenure of office. It is a practice long sanctioned by custom, but we do not believe it is a good one.

No one would dispute the right of any historical personage to secrete or even to destroy as many of his purely private papers or records as he might see fit, or the right of his family to do either after his death. But the character of the documents in the Hyde Park collection thus far made public—schoolboy essays, collegiate term-papers, memoranda about the proper method of preparing game for the table, and so forth—does not suggest that Mr. Roosevelt's inclinations were usually destructive.

Nevertheless, the opening of the Hyde Park Library has not resolved the problem posed here a little more than two years ago. How, we asked, > are we to be sure that the distinction between what is of legitimate interest to historical scholars and what would be of interest only to biographers would be drawn on the basis of "propriety" and not in the service of "the Roosevelt legend?" Meanwhile, historians concerned with the secret diplomatic gambits which preceded the Second World War are confronted by certain puzzles on which the Roosevelt papers among others, could certainly shed much light.

It will be interesting to see just how much of this light will be shed before 1975.

Nonpartisan Elections

The decision of the Montgomery County Circuit Court ruling out nonpartisan elections to the county council will be a blow to the new home-rule government functioning there. County officials and the Montgomery County Charter Committee intend to appeal the ruling, and they are not likely to be satisfied until the State Court of Appeals has said the last word. For the attempt of the professional politicians to compel the holding of county elections on a partisan basis is designed to restore the discredited regime that was swept out by the charter movement. It seems to be assumed that if elections are held under party labels, the charter supporters drawn from both major parties are more likely to be split apart. If that should prove to be true, the reforms they have inaugurated would be imperiled.

Whatever the merits of the legal arguments pro and con may be, we think a great deal of nonsense is being talked about the necessity of partisan local elections in order to preserve the two-party system. In State and national affairs the two-party system has proved to be a bulwark of representative government. In municipal affairs it has often brought corruption, favoritism, patronage and inefficiency. Most people, we suspect, are more interested in having a local government that renders efficient municipal service than in having a Democratic or Republican label on it. Nonpartisan elections give the people a chance to vote for efficiency and integrity without being confused by party labels. The one thing that seems certain to us is that if the citizens of Montgomery County do not now have this privilege because of the arbitrary Lindsay law, that act should be repealed.

Guilt by Association

It has suddenly occurred to me that maybe I had better report myself to Senator McCarthy, or to the FBI, or the Loyalty Board or somebody, because I belong to an organization to which presumptive Communists also belong.

I confess to the Senator. I belong to the National Press Club. Its published membership list includes the names of three men, each of whose stated affiliation is Tass News Agency. Tass is the official news setup of the Soviet Russian government, with Moscow headquarters and direction.

If I read aright, Senator McCarthy's thesis as posed on The Hill, this puts me on a very perilous spot. Maybe I'll write to Mr. Truman about it. For he is also listed as a member of the National Press Club.

Supersonic Propellers

Another indication of how a "little knowledge can be a bad thing," especially applicable to Drew Pearson's column, is his March 14 statement on the tremendous supersonic speed of the proposed swept-wing version of the B-36 using supersonic propellers.

Mr. Pearson has obviously construed the supersonic propeller as meaning a propeller which pulls an airplane at supersonic speeds. Aeronautical engineers have had trouble with supersonic tip speeds of propellers for many years. As blades are increased in length the rotational speed at the tip increases until it becomes supersonic. Supersonic propellers are propellers designed to give efficient thrust when the rotational speed of the blade exceeds the speed of sound.

For reasonable predictions as to what the revamped swept-wing B-36 will do, I suggest that Mr. Pearson read page 15 of March 13 Aviation Week. The Mach limitation is increased from the .69 of the present B-36 to .75 for the new version with turbo prop T-40 engines with the eventual hope of the Air Force to reach a 500 mile an hour speed at 55,000-feet altitude. This is a far cry from the tremendous speeds Mr. Pearson speaks of.

It is also interesting to note that the USAF put all its eggs in one basket in 1944 on jet engines when the Navy began an engineering development of turbo prop engines. Now the B-36 will be powered with Navy engines which have taken four years to develop using Navy funds.

"Cut Wood Or Starve"

It would appear that Earl Christensen in his letter of March 15 commenting on your March 7 editorial, cannot see the people for the wood. During WPA days some attempt was made to put the unemployed to work using their acquired skills for the community good and in many instances teaching relief workers new skills. During the last war we used the same principles with success in defense plants and repair depots.

The fact that we only have woodcutting work to offer relief workers is an indication that our technological advance has not developed beyond the drawing board and laboratory. We brag of our streamlined refrigerators, radios, television and jet planes, but at the same time we throw men and women on the junk heap after they pass 35 years of age and for the unemployed we can think of nothing more constructive than slicing chunks of wood.

Actually, the very fact that Americans are on relief proves that our political braggarts who are forever telling the world about "our way of life," do not know what they are talking about and have never poked face into the backyards of a country that can crack an atom but fails miserably when it comes to providing full employment for all its citizens.

Secret Weapon

In an item in your February 16 issue, it was disclosed that the Army has again announced that it possesses a "secret weapon" and that this "secret" was to be kept a "closely guarded one"; in fact it was not proposed to say anything about it to anyone except the people who read the newspapers.

This announcement did not appear to serve any purpose except to alert any spies who might be seeking employment and to inform them where their efforts might be most profitably directed. It would, in fact, remind one of nothing so much as of an irritating, self-important little girl parading before her playmates and chanting, "I know something that you don't know."

In case it has never occurred to the Department of Defense or the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee, might it not be well for someone to suggest to them that the best way to keep a secret is merely not to say anything about it whatever—not even in the newspaper headlines—thereby keeping dark not only the nature of the secret but the fact that a secret exists at all?

D. C.'s Poor Example

The past week I had the pleasure of being in a civic group which was visited by several Japanese women now in this country for a study of the customs and institutions which constitute our American way of life. The purpose of their visit is to see democracy in action so that, on returning to Japan, they may help other citizens learn the ways of responsible participation in government.

I wish every American could have witnessed the bewilderment of these visitors when they learned that the citizens of Washington cannot vote. Their puzzlement was complete. When the facts were at last made plain they were very evidently shocked and disillusioned. Clearly they had expected better things of democracy than this.

It is the duty of every resident of the District to make such incidents known to their friends in the States in order that they may immediately request the signatures of their Congressmen on the Discharge Petition No. 19 which would bring the Kefauver Home Rule Bill before the House of Representatives for a vote.

U. N. And China

It is a strangely cynical proposal that has just been put forth by a high U. N. official for settling the impasse with the Russian Communists over the Chinese delegation at the United Nations.

As only a minority of the member countries have as yet recognized the Kremlin-backed Red regime in China, the Nationalist Government still legally occupies China's seat at the United Nations as one of the Big Five on the Security Council and on the various U. N. committees and commissions.

Under the formula presented, "recognition" would be completely divorced from "representation." By this sleight-of-hand performance, government officials in countries where public opinion would not tolerate recognition of the Red aggressors can "acquiesce" gracefully in a change of representation. Machiavelli himself could hardly have devised a more cold-blooded and immoral plan.

Today a crucial test confronts the United Nations with respect to their action or inaction on the charges against Russian Communist interference and Russian Communist-directed aggression in China preferred by the Chinese representative at the U. N. It was lack of courage and determination on the part of the democratic countries in dealing with the aggression of powerful members that led to the downfall of the League of Nations. Is history going to repeat itself in the United Nations?

Heifetz Recital

Now, I feel, is the proper time for someone to take your music critic, Mr. Paul Hume, to task. An excellent case in point is his March 15 Postlude article on the Heifetz recital at Constitution Hall.

I have the feeling while reading it (and had while reading his past articles on the Rubenstein recital and the Mitropoulos-National Symphony performance) that here is a listener who knows all the faults as well as the excellencies of a performance, but who feels it necessary to exaggerate the excellencies at the expense of stating the faults explicitly. No perceptive music-lover at the Heifetz recital could fail to be repulsed by playing which was fraught with flabbergasting trivialities, and which worked up to a final bid for encores which in sheer vulgarity was equalled only by the vulgarity of the cheering audience that had mopped up the sop thrown to it.

Tito's Defection

The papers have brought to our attention the so-called "Tito defection," and the question of how we can capitalize on it.

Nowhere have I seen any question raised as to the genuineness of the defection.

Our sources have made it clear that the Communists are exceeding resourceful and it would seem a possibility, if not a probability, that the defection could have been manufactured by and between Tito and Moscow for the purpose of draining money and/or goods into the Communist world.

The gain would be twofold: (1) depletion of the strength of the Western world, and (2) increase in the strength of the Communist world.

Nothing has come to my attention to indicate that Tito is anything but a Communist, and it seems significant that nothing has happened to him other than words.

Matter of Fact

By Stewart Alsop

The Log Jam

AN ABSOLUTE DEADLOCK on a vital issue of American policy has now developed between the State and Defense Departments. The issue is whether or not to go ahead with a peace treaty for Japan—a decision which profoundly affects the whole range of American policy in Asia.

The State Department is firmly convinced that an early peace treaty, whether with or without the concurrence of the Soviet Union, is essential. But the Pentagon has taken the stand that a peace treaty will undermine the American security position in the Far East.

The inner history of the deadlock is interesting. As first reported in this space, Secretary of State Dean Acheson agreed with British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin, on Bevin's September visit to Washington, that a peace treaty for Japan was long overdue.

Acheson agreed to have a draft proposal for a peace treaty worked out, and delivered to the British for discussion with the Commonwealth countries at the recent Colombo conference. A proposal was drafted, but it was never delivered to the British. The Pentagon intervened.

What the State Department proposed—and still proposes—is roughly as follows: First, diplomatic means would be used to reach agreement with the pro-Western majority of the Far Eastern Commission — no easy task, since Australia and the Philippines particularly fear Japanese industrial and commercial revival, without which an independent Japan could not survive.

WITH THIS HURDLE surmounted, the second step would be an invitation to the Soviet Union — and to Communist China if a majority of the Far Eastern Commission had recognized the new regime, as is likely—to a peace treaty conference. If the Soviets refused, the conference would be convened anyway. If they accepted, they could be outvoted on the vetoless council. Finally, as a condition of the treaty, a lateral agreement would be worked out with the Japanese, providing for the retention of American bases on the islands.

This proposal was referred to the Defense Department last November, and drew a prompt dissent from Undersecretary of War Tracy Voorhees, who is in charge of occupied areas. The Joint Chiefs of Staff subsequently supported Voorhees, on security grounds.

The basic Pentagon objection is that American bases would commit the United States to the defense of Japan in case of war, and within the limits of American military strength imposed by Defense Secretary Louis Johnson, Japan could not be defended against a major assault. Yet this logic is difficult to follow, simply because even now the American occupation troops could not possibly defend Japan against an all-out assault, as General Douglas MacArthur is fully aware.

Moreover, MacArthur himself has supported the State Department position, first to Voorhees on his trip to Japan last December, then to the joint chiefs in February, and more recently to Far Eastern Division Chief Walton Butterworth. Yet the Pentagon has refused to budge.

THE DANGER is obvious. The Soviet Union could at the very least now deeply embarrass the United States by calling for a Japanese treaty conference, while the United States has neither agreement with its allies, nor agreement within the American Government. The long-term danger is perhaps greater. For the longer it continues, the more surely will the American occupation of Japan, with its violent social, economic and racial strains, play directly into Communist hands.

Indeed, the danger is now so acute, that the State Department is even seriously considering the appointment of a special official of high rank—the name of Gen. Walter Bedell Smith has been mentioned—to deal with the problem. This official would act as a sort of ambassador-extraordinary, not only to our allies on the Far Eastern Commission, but also to the Pentagon. This in itself is an interesting commentary on the relations between the State and Defense Departments.

There is still some hope that the deadlock can be broken without resorting to any such extraordinary device. But the signs now are that the dispute will have to be referred, still unresolved, to the National Security Council, and from the council to the President. It will then be up to Truman to break the log jam one way or another. The record suggests that when the chips are down, Truman will back Acheson and the State Department. At any rate, the log jam must be broken soon. For until there is agrement on Japan, there can be little hope for a strong, effective American policy anywhere in Asia.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Acheson On Germany

OF SECRETARY Acheson's seven points to "relax tension," the first is fundamental to all the others. This was his call for peace treaties with Germany, Austria, and Japan, and most particularly Germany. The paramount issue of the cold war is and always has been the future of Germany. The capture of the eastern satellite states is a by-product of the advance of the Red Army into the center of Germany. It is the presence of the Red Army 500 miles west of the Soviet frontier which makes western Europe so profoundly insecure. It is the appearance of two rival German states, capable of precipitating a civil war, which constitutes the greatest threat to the peace of the world.

Lippmann

Only, therefore, by an acceptable German settlement is there any chance that the two great conflicting systems could find a way to co-exist peacefully.

MR. ACHESON devoted one paragraph of his address to Germany, saying that "unification under a government chosen in free elections under international observation is a basic element in an acceptable settlement." Insofar as this recognizes the need to end the partition of Germany and to arrive at an all-German government which the German nation has ratified, it lays down a constructive principle.

But whether good or evil will come of it depends on how the principle is to be formulated into a program on which the Germans and the occupying powers are to act.

AND THAT will depend, I believe, on whether the free elections in Germany precede or follow an agreement negotiated by the Germans, and approved by the Big Four, on the terms by which the two German states are to be unified.

There are indications from both German states that many men in Germany are thinking of elections before the Germans themselves have an agreement on unification. That would mean that the elections would not settle anything. They would be the election not of a government but of a constituent assembly which would then become the arena of the struggle for the mastery of the all-German state. Mr. McCloy's press conference some weeks ago, Mr. Acheson's San Francisco speech, and the announcement in Bonn on Thursday that the cabinet is drafting a plan for an all-German election all lend themselves to this interpretation.

IF THAT is what is contemplated, it should be reconsidered with the utmost care. For an attempt to hold an election of this kind in the present condition of Germany and of Europe, with no basic constitutional issue decided among the Germans, with the international position of Germany and her frontiers unsettled, would be to plant a time-bomb in the heart of Europe.

The elections would almost certainly be as violent as they were inconclusive. The most orderly, the most profoundly democratic people, could not settle a fundamental question like unity by elections. We were unable to do it by the election of 1860, and we ought not to dream of permitting the Germans to attempt it. Elections are a way of choosing governments in a nation which is already united. They are not a way to unite a nation which is so deeply divided as is Germany today. That would be a way to precipitate a German civil war, into which we should all be sucked until it became an international war.

THE IDEA that German unification should begin with elections instead of being consummated and ratified by elections is inconsistent with all that we know, and all that Mr. Acheson has been saying so emphatically, about the Soviet Union's treatment of international agreements.

For how can we know and believe that we cannot collaborate with Russia, but that at best we might co-exist, entertain the idea of holding elections of such gravity "under international observation?" That would require supreme confidence in and good faith by the international observers—the very virtues we cannot count upon.

THE RIGHT and the only safe course, it seems to me, is to treat free elections as the final act, not the opening act, of the work of reunification. We should, in agreement with our allies and after a thorough explanation to the Russians, invite the Germans to negotiate this question. We should ask them to do overtly and legitimately what they are now doing informally and more or less secretly.

We should not attempt now—it is much too late—to negotiate with the Russians about Germany. We should invite the Germans to propose a German settlement—dealing with unification, armed forces and police, guarantees against aggression, evacuation, and their own neutralization—agreements on which the four powers might then try to agree, which, if they did agree, could then be subject to plebiscite of the German nation.

THE PRACTICAL advantages of such a policy are, I believe, very great indeed. The greatest of all the advantages would be that a German settlement which the Germans believed they had themselves made would have a moral force among Germans in the future that no imposed settlement can ever have.

Oust Acheson, McCarthy Urges

the Senate in a speech which brought about the current investigation. McCarthy said they were for consideration privately.

At an open session today the committee will hear a reply by Ambassador Philip C. Jessup to McCarthy's charges that Jessup had "an unusual affinity for Communist causes."

The controversy over opening the files has put Administration leaders on the spot, since most of them say they believe a full examination of the records would knock the props from under McCarthy's case.

But McGrath was described as having told the President that a precedent-breaking decision to lay its secret records bare—even to a congressional committee—would hamstring the FBI's investigative work.

Once they were opened to one congressional group they could not be denied to others in the future, the Attorney General is said to have argued.

It was reported to be McGrath's contention that FBI sources of secret information will dry up automatically if it ever becomes apparent that data gathered by its agents on a confidential basis isn't going to be kept strictly secret.

On the other hand, those among the President's advisers who are urging that all the records be opened contend that leaks can be prevented and the committee can obtain the information it needs without a breach of secrecy.

Whatever the decision, Administration lieutenants said that the White House, rather than the departments directly concerned, will handle any viewing of the records.

If he decides to make any or all of them available, Mr. Truman is likely to lay down strict rules. These may provide that the Senators must go to the White House to see the files and may bar any but the Senators themselves from looking at them.

the right to fire employes summarily on either security or loyalty charges. The employes would have no appeal rights under such a proposal. Gladieux pointed out that the department had asked the Budget Bureau to include it in the summary firing bill now before Congress.

Wallaceites Draw Query

Subcommittee members wanted to know how many employes who were fired on loyalty charges had been brought into the department by former Secretary Henry A. Wallace. Gladieux didn't know. They also asked about William Remington whose name was brought into a congressional loyalty hearing by Elizabeth Bentley, the self-confessed spy queen.

The top loyalty review board cleared Remington. Gladieux told the subcommittee that Remington had been demoted a grade and that he doesn't have access to confidential information in his present job. Remington, incidentally, won a libel suit and collected a sum of money as an outgrowth of the Bentley charges.

that 71 of the Commerce Department's 40,000 employes have quit or been fired as a result of the Government loyalty-security program clampdown.

The subcommittee gave much of its attention to the Bureau of Standards, among the Commerce Department constituent agencies.

The committee transcript quoted Condon as saying, in part:

"All I wanted to say is that we, in all of our security matters, have taken the utmost serious view of our responsibilities on security. We are pretty familiar with the facts in this matter, and although we did not have the final responsibility in regard to clearance we felt that more harm would be done than good by taking any drastic action, and for that we take the full responsibility. I think in this particular case the very fact that the man was fully cleared after an unnecessarily long-drawn-out investigation justifies the position we took.

"The most difficult question we have to face is the question of decent, humane consideration of people against whom improper allegations have been made which are not substantiated on full investigation.

"This whole loyalty program has given rise to more—has been used more for malicious slander and wrecking of characters than anything I know of, although we cannot dispose of it because it has a useful purpose to fulfill, but still the program certainly has been misused by a lot of evil people."

Dr. Davies Defends Acheson; Urges 'Quiet' Loyalty Probe

The Rev. Dr. Powell Davies yesterday defended Secretary of State Acheson.

In a sermon at All Souls' Unitarian church, 16th and Harvard sts. nw., Dr. Davies declared that Acheson is "desperately trying to arouse the nation to a full recognition of its peril and . . . to unite us behind a policy that combines strength and resolve with a high sense of moral aim and worthy purpose."

Yet, he said, Acheson is "sniped at, whispered about and badgered by the same paltry men who have done the same paltry things to every other man of stature in the government."

He charged that "political opportunists" are sowing "suspicion and mistrust . . . pretending that they do it as patriots seeking to uncover disloyalty."

Searching out treason, Dr. Davies said, is a "delicate business, to be undertaken quietly, responsibly and soberly by people who understand that business."

It is necessary, he continued, to identify efficiently "whatever traitors there are in the Government and then to deal with them to our advantage."

"This cannot be done by turning a Senate hearing into a sideshow at a circus," he declared.

Mental balance and emotional maturity, he said, are necessary if we are to defeat the communists.

"The communists are smart. Much too smart for Senator McCarthy, because he is doing exactly what they want him to do," he said. Wisconsin Senator Joseph R. McCarthy's charges of communism in the State Department were aired before the Senate last week.

America is giving Stalin what he wants "not through disloyalty but through stupidity," Dr. Davies said.

"To an altogether shocking extent," he said, "we have fulfilled Hitler's predictions that if he were defeated Soviet communism would carry on his work of undermining civilization and the western world would not know how to resist."

2 Freight Trains Crash in Virginia; $125,000 Damage

Seneca, Va., March 19 (AP)—Two Virginian Railway freight trains collided near here last night in what railroad officials described as one of the worst accidents in the history of the line.

No one was injured, but the collision caused an estimated damage of $125,000 and tied up all rail traffic for about 15 hours.

Both of the trains, one a coal unit and the other an outright freight, were headed west when the coal train struck the rear of the freight.

The rear of the first train and the locomotive and first two cars of the second were demolished. The collision closed the Virginian's main line for more than 20 hours.

Tigers' Three-Run Rally in Sixth Beats Nats, 4 to 1

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

ORLANDO, FLA., MARCH 19.—Grapefruit League culls: Quoting the latest Yogi Berra-isms is the newest fad in the Florida training camps and now they are telling the one about Yogi's recent fatherhood. Every itinerant who happens into the Yankee camp is subject to the happiness of Yogi, who whips his infant daughter's picture from his hip pocket and boasts:

"Ain't she beautiful—and she looks nothing like me."

POVICH

Some sad comments have been made about the dismal outlook of the Nats but it remained for an anonymous headline writer of the Miami Herald to sum up the Washington club in its complete futility.

Captioning a routine account of the Nats' problems by Sports Editor Jimmie Burns, the headline man ascribed cutely: "Nats lack hitting, pitching and defense; otherwise they're loaded."

A FAMILY tug-of-war is raging in the midst of the Eddie Robinsons in the Nats' camp. First Baseman Robinson has arrayed little 2-year-old Eddie, jr., in a tailored-to-order baseball uniform, that is an exact copy of his daddy's even to the No. 25 on the shirt.

Robinson, visioning the lad as a major league star 18 years hence, loses no opportunity to give the boy a baseball and play catch with him. But Grandpa Robinson, a football fan, has other ideas. He sees the boy as an All-America college star.

Thus far, little Eddie has been showing a distinct preference for football to the annoyance of his daddy, and wants to tackle every adult within sight. The other day, Papa Eddie almost gave up and decided to let football-minded grandpappy have his way. He tossed little Eddie a baseball, and the boy blithely flipped it knee high and tried to punt the thing.

A SUCCESSION of major league teams gave up on Miami Beach as a training camp site because the fans wouldn't respond to their exhibition games. But rid of a steady diet of baseball, the beach is now the most profitable town in which big leaguers play.

Brooklyn and the Braves drew 14,000 the other night. The Yankees moved in against the Dodgers a couple of days later, and set a new record of 17,444 fans. It lasted until the next afternoon when the Yanks and Red Sox drew more than 18,000.

Jackie Robinson has compiled a 1.000 average for the Dodgers that has 'em considerably worried. He has made three attempts to play second base in the exhibition games and hurt his leg three times. Painful muscle injuries now have him on the bench indefinitely.

Branch Rickey says frankly that he's perturbed about Robinson, "I'm worried—awfully worried," he admitted. "Every time he tries to put pressure on the leg it gets hurt." And it's no comfort to the Dodgers that Robinson is hobbled at a time when he ought to be running off some of the overweight with which he reported to the Dodgers' camp.

DANNY GARDELLA, who achieved some fame by entering a suit against baseball and was finally appeased by being given a job with the Cardinals, hasn't yet distinguished himself. The best he has achieved thus far is a post in the outfield on the Cardinals' B team.

At Tampa the other day when the Cardinal B's were playing the Cincinnati Reds' second team, Outfielder Gardella misjudged two easy fly balls that fell for cheap hits. "And now," cracked one of the Reds' writers, "baseball ought to sue Gardella—for impersonating a ball player."

The Yankees have a brash young rookie in Billy Martin, second baseman from the Coast League, who frankly intends to run Jerry Coleman out of his regular infield job with the team. And it is better than a long-shot possibility, say some of the Yankee fellow-travelers.

When Martin reached the Yankees' camp, he was asked about the story told about him when he joined Hollywood of the Coast League a couple of years ago. "Is it true that you walked up to Dario Lodigiani and told him you were going to run him right out of the third base job?" he was asked.

"I said no such thing when I talked to Lodigiani," declared Martin. "But that ain't saying it wasn't in my mind."

Sweep 3-Game Series

Browns Sock 4 Home Runs, Beat Giants Again, 10 to 8

Phoenix, Ariz., March 19 (AP).—The St. Louis Browns erupted with a flock of home runs before 2717 amazed fans here today to score a 10-inning 10-8 victory over the New York Giants.

The victory gave the Browns a clean sweep of their three-game exhibition baseball series here. The fourth of today's Brownie homers came by Sherman Lollar in the top of the 10th, putting the American Leaguers into the lead, 9-8.

Dick Kokaes banged a two-run homer for St. Louis in the fourth; Charlie Grant socked a homer in the same inning, and in the fifth Ken Wood sent the ball over the fence for a three-run homer.

Bosox Cuff Yanks, 10-7; Doerr Hits Homer Again

Miami, Fla., March 19 (AP).—The New York Yankees and the Red Sox staged another slugfest today and this time it was the Boston Bombers who came from behind to win, 10 to 7.

Trailing 6-4, they routed Wally Hood with a five-run barrage in the seventh, the rally being featured by Bobby Doerr's second home run in as many days.

The Yankees hopped on young Maurice McDermott, who was wild, for one run in the first inning and three in the second. The Sox tied the score against Fred Sanford in the fifth but the world champions forged ahead with a pair of Boo Ferriss in the sixth.

A base on balls, Merrill Combs' double, a single by Ted Williams, the Doerr homer, two more bases on balls and Lou Stringer's single sent Hood to the showers in the seventh.

Robin Roberts pitched three scoreless-hitless innings and so did Ken Heintzelman. But the latter issued five walks, three of them setting up Boston's first run in the sixth.

Lemon fanned four, gave only two walks and did not yield a hit in the first five innings, but the Seals scored two unearned runs. In the last three frames they nicked Mike Garcia for all five of their hits.

Griffs Get Only 4 Hits Off Trucks, Houtteman

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Orlando, March 19.—The sad monotony of the Nats' futility in the Grapefruit League was unbroken today.

They labored and brought forth only four mouse-like hits against Virgil Trucks and Art Houtteman of the Tigers, and took a 4-1 licking.

It wasn't Ray Scarborough's fault. The solid man of the Nats' pitching staff worked the first four innings, shut the Tigers out with one hit and turned over a 1-0 lead to his successors. When Scarborough walked off the field—poof, went the Nats.

Young Dick Welteroth took over in the fifth and the Tigers took him in the sixth—for three runs. The pivotal blow was a bases-full single by young Johnny Groth that fetched the tying and winning runs home. The Tigers picked up their fourth run off Cuban Connie Marrero in the eighth.

Lipon Presents Nats a Run

At no time were the Nats smashing the ball against the two Detroit fire-ballers, Trucks and Houtteman. The one run they did get off Trucks in the fourth, was all tidied up as a gift package from Shortstop Johnny Lipon, who made a wild throw.

The Nats never did recover those three Detroit runs in the sixth. Houtteman moved in after the Tigers took the lead, and the 2926 fans in Tinker Field watched the young right hander reduce the Nats to complete impotency.

In those last four innings, the only hit credited to the Nats was Mike Grasso's—he got hit with a pitched ball. They couldn't nudge any of Houtteman's pitches out of the infield.

After Scarborough breezed through those first four innings, the Nats set their lone run in motion when Dente drew a walk. Noren forced Dente and Robinson also grounded to Lipon, but everybody was safe when Lipon threw wildly past second base, Dente reaching third.

Stewart Bats In Lone Run

Eddie Stewart raised a modest fly ball to Johnny Groth in center field, and Noren broke for home after the catch. He made it, despite a smart throw by Groth, with a clever slide that carried him past the tag of Catcher Aaron Robinson.

Vic Wertz put Welteroth in trouble in the sixth with a double to left after Kell walked. Pat Mul-

Locke's Reinstatement Hinted

Zaharias Sets Record at 298 In Titleholders

Augusta, Ga., March 19 (AP).—Babe Didrikson Zaharias, wearing her "killer clothes," won the Women's Titleholders tourney with a record-breaking 298 strokes.

Her final round in the 72-hole tournament was done in 75 and followed others of 72, 78 and 73.

Besides setting a new record, the Babe won her second Titleholders. She was the victor in 1947 with 303 strokes, which stood as a record until Peggy Kirk of Findlay, Ohio, won on 299 last year.

Claire Doran, Cleveland high school teacher, held the same No. 2 position throughout the tournament. Her 77 on the final day gave her a 306.

Taking no chance of breaking her luck, the Babe today wore the same costume as yesterday when she scored a one over par 73 on the 6619-yard Augusta Country Club course. The costume is a black skirt, somber gray sweater and dull blue visor cap.

The glamorous Bauer girls, Alice and Marlene, were the disappointments of the tourney. Marlene had a 320 and Alice a 322.

The Babe said she definitely was back to winning. "When I get a little more familiar with my new game, I'll be better still," she said. "This was my first win since the All-America last summer and I'm sick of getting beat."

The Babe recently spent five days working with Tommy Armour at Boca Raton, Fla. Armour, one of the great golfers of all time, altered the Babe's game considerably. However, Mrs. Zaharias said, "I'm not telling anybody what Tommy did. That's my secret. Let the rest of the gals try and find out what it was."

Tom's Auto Wins County Title

Tom's Auto won the Montgomery County Park Basketball League championship by defeating Colesville, 52-43, yesterday at Takoma Park Junior High. John Lumpkin paced the victors with 12 points while Acki Viana of the losers was the game's high scorer with 16.

That In-Again, Out-Again Ballplayer Earl Wooten Is Apparently in Again

Winter Garden, Fla., March 19 (AP)—Earl (Junior) Wooten, young outfielder sold to Kansas City by Chattanooga on a look basis, may not retire from baseball after all.

Wooten yesterday said definitely he would not play this year and that he already had accepted a full-time job as assistant athletic director at a Pelzer textile mill.

Later, however, he hedged a bit on the retirement question. "That's a pretty definite statement to make," he said.

The former Washington outfielder said he had returned all contracts offered by Kansas City.

A's Pull Triple Play, Down Dodgers, 8-2

West Palm Beach, Fla., March 19 (AP).—The Philadelphia Athletics manufactured a triple play and two double plays today, and with the aid of some shoddy Brooklyn defense downed the Dodgers 8-2 for their fourth win in five grapefruit league contests.

The three-ply job came in the first inning to choke off a Dodger rally that already had produced one run. The bases were full when rookie Wayne Belardi lined to First-Baseman Ferris Fain. Fain threw to Eddie Joost to double Duke Snider at second, and the return throw from Joost to Fain beat Bob Morgan back to first.

The defeat cost the Bullets a chance to tie Philadelphia for the Eastern Division's fourth spot and a possible playoff berth which Philly now gets.

Official Says PGA Boards Favor Okay

Norwich, Conn., March 19 (AP).—The early reinstatement of Bobby Locke, British Open golf champ from South Africa, so he can once again play in Professional Golf Association tournaments in this country was indicated tonight by a PGA vice president here.

Joseph Donato, local professional and PGA official, said Locke has complied with the requirements laid down for his reinstatement by the PGA's executive and tournament committees, and they favor removing the ban against the husky foreign star on April 15.

Donato said his information came in a letter from Horton Smith, PGA secretary, which stated that Locke has apologized for his failure to appear for the 1940 Inverness golf matches in Toledo, Ohio, and several exhibition matches last July.

Locke's apology was required by the PGA. According to Donato, the South African ace not only apologized, but sent along signed copies of the PGA players' agreement to Joe Novak, president of the association.

In his apology, Locke wrote:

"I would like to apologize, through the medium of the U. S. PGA to the Inverness club, and to the Western Golf Association, and to the clubs where I was billed to play exhibitions, for the inconvenience caused them by my not appearing, but this was due to my winning the British Open."

Locke was blacklisted by the PGA shortly after his belated withdrawal from the $15,000 Inverness matches, which got under way July 24.

Cobb, Speaker and Baker Back in Organized Baseball

To Play With Dallas

DALLAS, TEX., March 19 (AP). Did you ever see Ty Cobb play baseball? Or Home Run Baker? Or Tris Speaker?

Oilman Dick Burnett figures few fans in Dallas ever have, so he's collected these three and six other fabled players for a "one batter" team that will open the Texas League season for his Dallas club.

The Texas League gave him special permission to assemble the nine "greats" without the formality of observing baseball law—such as club releases, contracts, etc.

Cobb, Baker, Speaker, Dizzy Dean, Charley Grimm, Mickey Cochrane, Travis Jackson, Charley Gehringer, and Duffy Lewis will form the starting lineup for Dallas when it opens the season April 11 in a night game against Tulsa.

This latest idea of Burnett's is just another in his ambition to crack the Texas League opening-day attendance record—and set one that may never be equalled in minor league baseball.

The first game of the season is already set for the Cotton Bowl, 75,000-plus seat football stadium and Burnett has hopes for a crowd of 40,000.

"The "immortal nine" that will start for Dallas will play the first batter. After that the regular team will take over.

Grimm, scheduled to be on first base at the start of the night game, is Dallas regular field manager.

Dean will pitch to Mickey Cochrane, famed former catcher for the Philadelphia Athletics and Detroit Tigers. He's a coach for the A's now.

Detroit's once fabulous "mechanical man," Gehringer, will be at second, flanked at shortstop by Travis Jackson, former New York Giant star.

Baker, another former Philadelphia Athletics ace, will be at third base.

The outfield will have Lewis, Speaker and Cobb.

Smith-Dynamite Fight At Turner's Tonight

Gene Smith, who has scored six knockouts in seven professional starts steps out in his first feature bout at Turner's Arena tonight against Little Dynamite, his more experienced rival who never has been knocked off his feet.

The two local featherweights are meeting in a scheduled seven-round bout. Four six-round contests are also scheduled.

The hard-hitting 18-year-old Smith is a 6-5 favorite over Little Dynamite, who has had 20 pro fights and scored 18 victories.

Dynamite scored one of his most impressive victories over Leo Lebrun, the Canadian contender. He has also defeated Jose Cardenas, and Tony Longo. His two defeats were to Charlie Titone and Johnny Lemons, and he later decisioned Lemons in a return match.

Lemons also is the only fighter so far to go the distance with Smith. Gene won city and Nation-wide honors in the amateur before turning pro.

He has been defeated only once and this was an amateur upset last July to Eddie Gilchrist, who won the national amateur bantamweight title.

Gilchrist is appearing on tonight's card against Billy Coffey Wilkinson, another local youngster who broke into the pro ranks a week ago by scoring a technical knockout over Puggy King.

The show also lists Roland Randall vs. Harvey Jones, Baltimore light heavyweights; Garland Edwards vs. Benny Droll, Fort Belvoir middleweights, and Tex Newby, Baltimore middleweight, against Holly Mims. Opening bout is set for 8:45 p. m.

Fred Scolari, With 860, Best Caps' Scorer

Fred Scolari was the Caps' high scorer for the 1950 season, with 860 points in 66 games for a 13-point average. Don Otten, acquired from Tri-City in a trade for Jack Nichols, finished second with 825 points in 64 games for a 12.9 mark.

Player-Coach Bob Feerick was fifth, with 517 in 60 for an average of 8.6.

The Caps play the New York Knickerbockers Tuesday night at Uline Arena in the first game of a best-two-of-three series for the Eastern Division Class "B" championship in the National Basketball Association.

The second game will be played at Madison Square Garden in New York on Wednesday night and the third, if necessary, will be New York on Saturday.

Jacksonville, Fla., March 19 (AP). Jack Burke, 27-year-old top-notch golfer, slammed his second straight 67 in the third round of the Jacksonville Open today and took the lead at 207.

Al Besselink, another youngster who plays out of Detroit, was one-under-par 71 for a 208 total and second place.

Ed Furgol, who has an unorthodox swing because of his withered left arm, matched Burke's 67 and was third at 209.

Five players came next at 210 including the original co-favorites Cary Middlecoff of Ormond Beach, Fla., and Sam Snead of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. Middlecoff was five under par at 67 today and Snead four under at 68 over the 6508-yard Hyde Park links.

Jerry Barber, front runner at the half-way point, fell far back to a total of 212 on a round of 76.

Burke, the curly-haired pro from White Plains, N. Y., who just arrived in golf's top bracket this year, banged out two eagles on the first nine which he played in four-under-par 32. He scrambled very little although he had to call on his putter to save him on the thirteenth hole.

Martin's Bakery moved a step closer to the second half championship of the Washington Suburban Soccer League by defeating Charles County, 3-0, yesterday at Hughesville.

79 Area Players Head For Baseball Camps

REEDEN KERSHBAUM CRIBBINS
The Washington Post

Three D. C. Baseball Hopefuls

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Greater Washington, which sent Charlie Keller, Bill Werber, George McQuinn and Sherry Robertson to the majors, is now being scouted as carefully for fresh young baseball talent as such top star-producing areas as North Carolina, Texas and California.

That's obvious with a bumper crop of 79 area players, more than ever before, heading for minor and major league training camps in the South and West this month.

Some new faces are showing bright promise—like Johnny Klippstein with the Cubs and Sam Webb with the Braves, both pitchers.

This is Klippstein's first visit to a big league camp. Formerly in the Cardinals' chain, Johnny was bought by Chicago following a 15-8 pitching performance for Mobile of the Southern Association.

The 6-foot 1-inch, 180-pound righthander has appeared in two exhibition games this spring, being nicked for two runs in three innings by the White Sox, and holding the Browns hitless and runless in a four-inning turn against the Browns.

A Silver Spring mailman in the off-season, the 22-year-old hurler got his start at Montgomery Blair High. He's had four years of minor league experience, and is a fast-baller.

Webb, a husky 6-foot 2-inch righthander, is getting his third major league chance. He won two and lost one for the Giants in 1948 and followed up with a 2-2 record for Leo Durocher last year. He was involved in the big six-player Giants-Braves swap last fall.

Two of Webb's four major league wins were at the expense of the Braves, and Manager Billy Southworth likes his chances of sticking. Webb was displeased at being used as a reliefer last year and is getting a chance to prove he can be a winning starter.

A McKinley Tech High boy, Webb has been in organized baseball for five years. He's 24.

Two homegrown products are in the Nats' camp, but aren't expected to stick. They are Dizzy Sutherland, who won 18 and lost 10 for Charlotte of the Tri-State League last season, and Catcher Hal Keller, a .322 hitting catcher for Hagerstown of the Interstate League.

Nats, Browns Corner Market

The Nats and Browns have a monopoly on District area lads with 14 apiece in their farm systems. The Athletics are next with eight. The only major league club which has no local investment is Pittsburgh.

Some of the youngsters who had good 1949 records in the minors are:

Outfielder Johnny Garrison, who batted .349 for the Nats' Class D Emporia farm, fourth best in the Virginia League, and he hammered 25 homers;

First Baseman Marty Cribbins, who hit .316 for the same club and smacked 13 homers;

Pitcher Al Berling of Emporia who compiled a 15-10 record and a 3.71 earned run average; lin also walked to fill the bases and then it was that Groth singled to center. Mullin scored from third a bit later while Robertson was throwing out Kryhoski.

Outfielder Tex Jones of the Dodgers' Valdosta Class D farm in the Georgia-Florida League with a .327 average, 37 stolen bases and 27 assists.

Marrero invited trouble in the eighth when he pitched a single to Wertz and walked Mullin with none out. But he apparently was getting out of it nicely. He fanned Groth and lured Kryhoski into a pop-up. But Eddie Robinson muffed Ginsburg's soft grounder and Wertz scored from third.

It all added up to the Nats fifth beating in six outings this spring.

IN SHORT, Buck Newsom, currently unattached, warmed up in full view of Tiger Manager Red Rolfe before the game—hopefully . . . Newsom is very much available, but Rolfe displayed little interest . . . Two distinguished alumni of the Nats, second baseman Gerry Priddy and coach Rick Ferrell, accompanied the Tigers to Orlando . . . Rolfe sat with Bucky Harris and Clark Griffith before the game, but all denied they talked trade . . . But the Tigers would entertain an offer of first baseman Eddie Robinson for first baseman Dick Kryhoski and one of their second-flight pitchers . . . Charley Kller of the Tigers got his first look at brother Hal in the Nats' uniform and commented, "The kid's fat" . . . Ray Scarborough was positively unfair when he threw a midseason curve ball on a three-and-two count to fan Vic Wertz in the first inning . . . Charley Keller retired from the scene in the fourth inning when he pulled a muscle in his side . . . Eddie Yost, who made an acrobatic diving catch of Johnny Groth's line drive in the second inning, should have saved the feat for tomorrow's game with Boston at Sarasota, winter headquarters of the circus. They'd give him tights and sign him up.

Greenbelt Victor

Greenbelt's 90-pound basketball team chalked up a 33-25 victory over Markham's Esso yesterday at Greenbelt. Mike Cockill's 16 points for the winners were the game's best.

Sid Schwartz Ousts Borotra

New York, March 19 (AP).—Sidney Schwartz, University of Miami, advanced to the quarter-final round of the national indoor tennis championships today, defeating the veteran Jean Borotra of France, 6—3, 6—3.

He next meets Don McNeill, the third man on the listings.

McNeill, a New Yorker, took the measure of Fred V. Krals, jr., of New York, 6—3, 6—1, today.

Budge Patty of Los Angeles, the No. 2 player, placed in the fourth round, eliminating Gus Ganzenmuller of Sea Cliff, N. Y., 6—3, 6—3, while Ed Moylan of Trenton, N. J., got the better of Chauncey D. Steele of Cambridge, Mass., 5—7, 7—5, 6—2, to enter the quarter-final round.

In the women's division, Nancy Chaffee of Ventura, Calif., stepped into the round of eight, winning over Shelia Duggan of Hartsdale, N. Y., 6—2, 6—2. Miss Chaffee is seeded first.

In the second round of the women's singles, Virginia Lee Boyer of Fairfax, Va., defeated Lee Goebel, New York, 6—4, 6—3.

Phillippe Neff of Washington, and Malcolm Fox, Baltimore, lost their first-round men's doubles match by default to Sidney Schwartz of the University of Miami, and Philip Hanna, New York.

Bill Bennings Says:

AT CHARLES TOWN

Dear Folks:

There's an election coming up in the Horsemen's Protective and Benevolent Association. It will mean that John Manfuso will relinquish his role as vice president for the Maryland-Virginia-Delaware-West Virginia division. Manfuso declined to run for the post again and he undoubtedly will be succeeded by Charles Feltner, former sheriff of nearby Clarke County, Va., and a well known owner-trainer. Manfuso, however, will be a candidate for the board of directors. Pressure of other business has forced the popular Chevy Chase, Md., man to lessen his turf activities.

After-Hours Clubs Lashed, Defended in Radio Debate

Attorney Ford Says They 'Improve' Members; Unfair Competition Cited

After-hour bottle clubs in the District were attacked last night as unfair competition for licensed and regulated business. They were defended as legal and law-abiding associations of District citizens banded together for mutual improvement.

The charges and defense came in a symposium over Radio Station WWDC, sponsored by the Junior Bar section of the District Bar Association.

Speaker for the clubs was Charles E. Ford, attorney. Against them were Alan W. Payne, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board; Clark F. King, assistant Corporation Counsel of the District; and Albert Brick, attorney. Leonard S. Melrod, of the District Bar Association was moderator.

The Federal Diary by Jerry Klutz begins on Page 1 today.

Ford in opening the discussion charged that the bottle clubs have been misrepresented. He said they are merely groups of citizens, exercising the privileges of citizens, to meet together "at times suitable to themselves" to "partake of beverages from bottles they themselves own." He said the clubs are organized according to law and qualify under the law.

Legal If True

King conceded that if these conditions were completely true, the clubs would be entirely legal. He said, however, that at least five of the clubs do more than "drink their own whisky." He said that in these cases, they were not limited to members only, and they sold whisky.

Brick said that the clubs should be brought under strict control, by act of Congress, or abolished entirely. He urged that Congress extend hours of regularly licensed drinking places so that "there would be no public demand for the bottle clubs." He charged that they evade fees, inspections, health regulations imposed on regularly licensed places and the District consequently loses revenue.

Payne said he agrees with Brick that the places should be either under control, or abolished. He asserted that testimony before a House District Subcommittee showed that the groups were not mutual organizations, but are operated solely for profit.

King reiterated that the clubs are businesses operated for profit and said that "if so, I don't know why they should not be regulated as other businesses."

Ford insisted that they are groups for "mutual improvement" and that this qualifies them under the District's corporation law, no other musical, educational, missionary or other activities being necessary.

The other speakers, picking up Ford's phrase, thereafter referred caustically to the after-hours places as "houses of mutual improvement."

Brick said the present corporation law, under which they exist is antiquated, and that a modern substitute for this law has long been sought by the Bar Association, without success. Brick also attacked the presence of policemen in them as members or otherwise, asserting it is not conducive to respect for law.

Kimono-Clad Japanese Girl Married To Florida Man in Simple Rites Here

1000 Jam All Souls' Church for Wedding; N. Y. Trip to Follow

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

Carrol Klotzbach, who secured an Act of Congress to permit entry of his Japanese fiancee to the United States, and the girl, Mitsue Shigeno, were married yesterday.

Nearly 1000 persons crowded All Souls' Church, 16th and Harvard sts. nw., to see the Rev. Dr. A. Powell Davies perform the 12:30 p. m. ceremony following the regular service at the church.

Another 200 persons, including newspaper and newsreel cameramen, waited outside to see the beaming bridal couple emerge, following the simple Unitarian rite.

Inside the church, at the start of the ceremony, Klotzbach and his best man, Horace M. Baxter, of 1455 Belmont st. nw., in black tie and wearing white carnations, stood at the altar.

The bridesmaids entered in single file. They were Fumiko Dixon, Toshiko Morgan, Japanese wives of Americans, and Kiyo Morita, a Japanese student here, and they wore kimonas predominantly blue, green and red, with red carnations in their hair.

The bride, wearing a tiara of white carnations, a brocaded black kimona and cream sash caught up in a magnificent butterfly bow in the back, and clogs, entered on the arm of her proxy parent, Bernard J. Oliver of 5919 Wilson lane, Bethesda.

The vows were repeated in voices at times scarcely audible at the rear of the church, and Organist Lewis Corning Atwater once again played strains from "The Mikado" and "Madame Butterfly"—music requested by the bridegroom.

Following the services the bridal party returned to the bridegroom's residence where a wedding cake decorated with Japanese and American flags awaited them. Among those present was Tsuneka Akumatsa, a Japanese woman senator from Tokyo.

There they performed the traditional Japanese wedding practice of san-san ku-do, bridegroom and bride lifting each of three ceremonial wine-cups to their lips three times. The silver, sake-filled cups had been loaned by Mrs. Oliver for the occasion.

Klotzbach, 49-year-old Kendall, Fla., horticulturist who met his bride in Japan, and Mrs. Klotzbach plan to make a wedding trip to New York City before returning to Florida.

Flames Raze Old Church at Poolesville

A Montgomery County church, whose origins date back 144 years, was burned to the ground yesterday afternoon before help could arrive.

The Elijah Methodist Church of Poolesville, Md., was destroyed in minutes, with a loss estimated at $10,000.

The Rev. Clifton W. Aukward, the pastor, said the loss included "a new $700 organ." The only salvageable item appeared to be the church bell," he added.

Willia J. Strachan of 2017-B 38th st. se., driving by at 5:35 p. m., said he saw 'smoke pouring out of the belfry, and a few seconds later the entire roof was on fire.

The building, a one-story frame structure, had its original cornerstone laid on July 4, 1806. Since then the church has been rebuilt, although some of the original pews still remained, Mr. Aukward said.

The pastor had conducted a service at 11 a. m., but no afternoon meeting was scheduled and the church was empty at the time of the fire.

The Upper Montgomery Volunteer Fire Department arrived too late in response to a belated alarm.

No Shooting, No Dice but 19 Are Arrested

Police Pvts. Frank Floyd and David A. Gould, of Scout Car 131, were considerably surprised, yesterday afternoon when they answered a call that there was a shooting.

The call sent them to the second floor of 2436 18th st. nw., Arrived, they found a locked door and silence. They broke in the glass of the door and entered.

There were 19 men gathered around a felt-covered table. It was the sort of table, they said, ordinarily used for crap-shooting. But—there were no dice and no money in sight. No guns, either. Just 19 silent men. No shooting.

The policeman scratched their heads. The place was labeled the "Social Waiters Club," organized about six weeks ago.

The policemen decided to call patrol wagons. Immediately, the 19 men were no longer silent. But in two wagon loads, they all went to the Thirteenth Precinct Station, where each was charged with disorderly conduct. After short cogitation, each of the 19 posted $5 and elected to forfeit it. Still, no shooting.

Infant Suffocates Under Blanket In Arlington Home

A 2-month-old infant, Andrea Williams, apparently smothered under a blanket in her crib yesterday, in an accident at the child's home, 2023 S. Oakland st., Arlington.

Arlington Coroner Dr. A. C. Welburn issued a certificate of accidental death due to suffocation.

The child's mother, Mrs. Douglas A. Williams, told police she awoke about 10:15 a. m. and discovered the child dead, with the blanket over its head.

Taste de Rigueur When Wine Experts Hold a 'Degustation'

The Washington commanderie de La Confrerie des Chevaliers du Tastevin yesterday gave a degustation, or wine-savoring party, on a scale unprecedented here.

Approximately 500 persons, connoisseurs and potential connoisseurs, sniffed the boquet, wrinkled noses in thoughtful appraisal, cocked eyes at the color in upraised glasses from 5:30 to 7:30 p. m. at the Hotel Raleigh, in what was probably the largest such palate frolic ever given in the District.

The wines presented by the Commanderie de Washington were American-made, from vines that had their origin on the Continent.

Wines from native American strains were not invited to the party of the brotherhood of wine tasters, who trace their origin to antiquity and have their mother house in the Chateau du Clos de Vougeot a few miles north of the Burgundian town of Nuits-Saint-Georges, Cote d'Or.

"Sixty cases of domestic wines will flow like water," an advance publcity release had said. More correct it would have been to say the wines dripped like leaky water faucets, for the chevaliers and their guests tasted rather than drank the Cabernet Sauvignon (1943), Point Blanc (1944), Johnnisberg Riesling (1948) and other varietes.

To refresh palates there were cheeses, including a new rindless variety, donated, like the wines, for the occasion.

"Cheese," explained Henry C. Howells of 2121 Bancroft pl. nw., commander of the Washington chapter, "is probably one of the most complementary foods to wine."

Howells and the other members wore their silver tasting cups on red and yellow ribbons about their necks. Rosettes of the same colors were in their lapels. Besides Howells, the chevaliers include: James C. Black, Dr. Walter S. Bloedorn, French Ambassador Henri Bonnet, E. M. Burnham, Maurice Chapuis, Warren R. Forster, Hugh Fullerton, Robert A. Learnard, Fred T. Marshall, A. Burks Summers, Edward K. Wheeler and Weston B. Grimes, adjutant.

Among those present were the Ambassador of Ecuador and Senora de Dillon; the Ambassador of Chile, Felix Nieto del Rio; Camille Chautemps, former premier of France, and Mme. Chautemps; Mrs. Burks Summers, Mrs. James Black, and Admiral and Mrs. Charles W. O. Bunker.

'One-Man Squad' Arrests 14 in 4 Hours

Police Pvt. Frank N. Manthos, the "one man vice squad" of 1948, is at it again.

By 2 a. m. yesterday he had arrested 14 women, all charged with vagrancy. At the Women's Bureau all 14 posted $300 bail each for appearance in Municipal Court today.

Manthos made 150 arrests on vice charges in eight months of 1948 when he was assigned to First Precinct. He was transferred late that year to Sixth Precinct, after a dispute with a fellow officer over testimony before the ABC board. He was transferred to Second Precinct last January 1.

The women arrested: Mary Lawrence, 36, 1341 6th st. nw.; Bessie Greer, 35, 1240 10th st. nw.; Hattie M. Williams, 27, 1132 7th st. nw.; Lorraine Gross, 23, 1535 B st. ne.; Bertha M. Afgan Named Best in Show At Armory

Tamerlane II Wins National Capital Title as 798 Dogs Compete Before 5000

By Melvin Altshuler
Post Reporter

Some 5000 humans and 798 dogs attended the annual National Capital Kennel Club's all-breed dog show at the National Guard Armory yesterday.

After 10 hours' judging a 4-year-old Afghan, Champion Tamerlane, II, was named Best of Show.

Owned by Dr. William H. Ivens, jr., of Ardmore, Pa., Tamerlane won in the hound breed classification. The other Best of Group winners, and the Afghan's competitors, were:

Terriers—Ch. Chief Barmaid, a wire-haired fox terrier, owner Benrook Kennels, Barrington, R. I.; Sporting Breeds—Rock Falls Rocket, an English setter, owner Moyra T. Grief, Owings Mills, Md.; Toy Breeds—Ch. Dah-Lyn Kai Jin of Cavershan, a Pekingese, owner John B. Royce, Brookline, Mass.; Working Breeds—Ch. Fury, a Great Dane, owner Creighton B. Hayne, Cleveland, and Non-Sporting Breeds—Ch. Reigate Dress Parade, a Dalmatian, owner Mrs. M. Firuski, Salisbury, Conn.

Generally speaking, the dogs had the better time.

They were, after all, fed, primped, baby-talked-to and put through their paces with affection. They had individual stalls where they could lounge and, in all security, bark at bigger dogs.

Dogs Duck Box Office

The humans enjoyed it, of course. But they had to pay to get in, then had their feet tramped on.

Dogless Washingtonians, who came just to look, suffered envy pangs. The majority of owners who entered the show's 70 classifications were disappointed, of course.

But the dogs—they made out swell and seemed to know it.

"I have seen some," said Edmund Becker of 4827 North ln., Bethesda, "whom I would swear knew what it was all about and enjoyed it."

"At the first few shows," reported Albert Meshirer of Millbrook, N. Y., "they're a little nervous. But then they get to love it—absolutely love it.

In the obedience trials, certainly, the dogs were less concerned than their masters.

The judges, about 20 of them, had it worse than the handlers.

They had to make some sharp decisions, with friends of the entrants looking on like baseball fans at a hometown game.

The technique of judging, explained Arthur R. Forbush of 5404 Galena pl. nw. is to set up an ideal dog in your mind and compare it with what comes before you.

"Ears count, say, two points," he said, "chest five and so forth.

"What you do is add it all up in your mind. In England you have cards to make your decision on. Not here. You do it in your mind . . ."

At this point, a woman with a southern accent interrupted:

"Do you remember that dog of mine you were afraid of passing in Norfolk? Well, he made first in Boston last month," she said archly.

". . . And," added Forbush unhappily when she moved on, "you can't satisfy everybody."

G. W. Student Hit By Jeep, 16th Traffic Victim of '50

D. C. Woman, Wed Month Ago, Killed In Freak Accident; Man, 61, Dies Here

District traffic deaths this year 16
Deaths this date last year . . . 16
Total traffic deaths 1949 71

A 17-year-old George Washington University student became the District's 16th traffic death of the year when struck by a Navy jeep on Riverside dr. last night shortly after 10 p. m.

Robert A. Williams died in Casualty Hospital at 11:55 p.m.

Park police reported that William B. Carlson, 20, of the Naval Receiving Center, operator of the jeep, told them he was driving along Riverside dr., near the Naval Music School, when he saw Williams and severed but could not avoid hitting him.

Hospital officials said Williams lived with his mother, Mrs. Eleanor Williams, of 101 S. Fairfax st., Alexandria.

Killed Near Highway

A 20-year-old Washington bride of one month was killed about 3:40 p. m. yesterday in Avenue, Md., when an automobile ran out of control and knocked her down as she stood by the highway.

Victim of the accident was Mrs. Mary Helen Dickinson of 1312 F st. ne., pronounced dead on arrival at St. Mary's Hospital, Leonardtown.

Mrs. Dickinson was talking with her husband, Oliver, a mechanic at the Manhattan Auto and Radio Co. in Washington, and another couple when the accident occurred, Maryland State police said. No one else was injured.

Fifteen Feet off Road

Driver of the car, identified by police as Lawrence O. Hayden of Bushwood, Md., was admitted to Leonardtown Hospital for observation of possible injuries.

According to State Troopers William Earle and G. F. Sanger, Mrs. Dickinson was crushed between Hayden's car and a parked vehicle. The car was parked 15 feet off the road, the troopers said, and was separated from the highway by a ditch.

Edward Winston of 1535 T st. nw., struck January 26 by a car as he crossed the 1900 block of 15th st. nw., died at 9 a. m. yesterday in Garfield Hospital.

District Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said he will perform an autopsy today to determine whether Winston's death was caused by the traffic injuries or other causes.

2 Elephants Ready to Sail For Zoo Here

Bombay, India, March 19 (U.P.)—Two baby elephants, gifts to the Washington Zoo from Premier Jawaharlal Nehru, were cheered by thousands of adults and children today as they were loaded aboard a ship for the voyage to America.

The babies, Shanti and Asoka, weighing 1000 pounds each, were placed in special 6-foot high cages aboard the American ship Steel Fabricator for their trip halfway round the world. The ship sails tomorrow morning.

Shanti had not completely recovered from an injury to her eye, suffered during her transfer from a truck to a wagon last week, but was expected to regain her vision fully before she arrived in the United States.

Babujan, 19-year-old cousin of Hollywood's elephant boy Sabu, will accompany the two elephants. Babujan said he was glad to be going to America, but had not yet decided how long he would remain or whether he would go to Hollywood.

The 8162-ton ship is owned by the Isthmian Shipping Co., which offered to transport the animals free after airlines rejected them because of their weight.

Taft to Push Fight To Appoint Counsel

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) is due to put up a stiff battle this week for the right to appoint a minority counsel of his own choosing to the important Murray subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee.

The subcommittee, which begun a series of probes into the various phases of the Taft-Hartley Act—chiefly with the idea of providing ammunition for the Fair Deal in fighting for repeal of the statute—will meet this week, probably today, in a closed door session to decide the issue.

Taft, who is senior minority member of the Labor Committee, some weeks ago agreed to support a committee request for funds to investigate the Taft-Hartley Act on several conditions. One condition was that all preliminary criticism of the Taft-Hartley Act be withheld. Another condition was that the minority would have the right to appoint its own counsel as a watchdog for the investigating subcommittee, headed by Senator James E. Murray (D., Mont.).

As a result of the "deal" which has been heatedly denied by pro-Administration members of the committee—the Senate Labor Committee quickly won $108,000 for the probe.

A few days ago, however, when the subcommittee met, it refused, at the urgent request of Senator Wayne Morse (R., Ore.) to approve as minority counsel the man chosen by Taft for the job: Joseph C. Wells, presently associate general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board in charge of the division of policies and appeals.

Morse, one of the few Republicans in Congress with strong labor support, opposed the appointment of Wells to the $8000-a-year post on the ground that Wells was too closely connected with "anti-labor" elements.

The Oregonian pointed out that Wells has been a close associate to Robert Denham, general counsel of the NLRB, who is anathema to organized labor; and that earlier he has been the chief legal assistant to Gerard Reilly, one-time NLRB member who as a private labor attorney is credited with having helped draft the Taft-Hartley Act.

Taft was absent from the meeting, but Senator Forrest C. Donnell (R., Mo.) put up an argument in favor of Wells. Then the issue was put over until Taft could be given an opportunity to put up his own argument.

2 D. C. Women Share Godiva Ancestry With Pilgrim Jones

By Robert Thompson
Post Reporter

The heritage of descent from Lady Godiva belongs not only to Wallace Jones, a pleasant, soft-spoken, studious law librarian here, but also to two well-known Washington women, Jones disclosed on his return from England yesterday after a pilgrimage to Coventry.

Further, he has traced out their ancestry to include English and Scottish kings, William the Conqueror, and Charlemagne of France, he disclosed. He showed documents which purport to prove it.

The two women are Mrs. Walker Totty, of the Westchester apartments, wife of the assistant secretary to the Majority of the Senate; and her daughter, Mrs. Arthur Clarendon Smith, jr., of 3208 Cleveland ave. nw.

Jones startled residents of Coventry last week when he placed flowers at the statue of Lady Godiva, who nearly a thousand years ago led a tax protest by disrobing and riding horseback through the town. Coventry welcomed him.

He also startled reporters at La Guardia field, Saturday morning when he returned. He told them he had traced his ancestry not only to Lady Godiva and her tax-cruel husband, Lord Leofric, but also to King Alfred of England and through him back to Hardreick, first Saxon king of England.

At his home, 4002 14th st. nw., yesterday the 43-year-old bachelor told of his hobby and some of its amazing results. He then disclosed that Mrs. Totty and Mrs. Smith, jr., are cousins, far removed but definite, and Mrs. Smith confirmed it last night. She has been aware, she said, of his 20-year research into their common family background.

Jones has been with the Department of Agriculture since 1933.

There was time out for two years in the Army Signal Corps at Camp Crowder.

Jones is not badly equipped, either for that job or for his research. He has five college degrees, all earned the hard way, from Washington University, St. Louis, Mo.; Southern Seminary, Louisville, Ky., and George Washington University.

B'nai B'rith Monsky Fund Gets $350,000

Pledges totaling $350,000 for the Henry Monsky Foundation were announced at the evening session of the five-day Triennial B'nai B'rith convention at the Hotel Statler yesterday.

Frank Goldman, president of the world's oldest and largest Jewish organization, said the gifts are for a memorial to Monsky, who headed B'nai B'rith from 1938 until his death in 1947, and would be used for religious, charitable or educational purposes.

The board of governors of the B'nai B'rith Orphan Home of Erie, Pa., turned over cash, securities and other assets approximating $170,000 for the largest report of the evening. Goldman said the gift would be used to create a youth encampment.

A $40,000 pledge was contributed by the Women's Supreme Council for a Four Freedoms Library, dedicated to the late President Roosevelt, to become part of the proposed Monsky Building.

An additional $140,000 was pledged by various B'nai B'rith units. Dr. Abraham Greenberg presented the largest single unit gift, $25,000 from the B'nai B'rith of Omaha, Nebr., where Monsky lived and cooperated with the late Father Edward J. Flanagan in founding and maintaining "Boy's Town."

Another feature of the evening was the awarding of citations by Sidney G. Kusworm of Dayton, Ohio, treasurer of the organization, to delegates who have served B'nai B'rith for 50 years or more.

The morning session of the second day's activities featured addresses by three foreign delegates reporting on B'nai B'rith activities and general conditions in their countries. They were Judge Shalom Kassan and Shalom Doron, vice president and secretary respectively of the B'nai B'rith District Grand Lodge in Israel, and Gordon Liverman, president of the B'nai B'rith Grand Lodge in Britain.

Liability Rates Are Raised for Young Drivers

Automobile liability insurance rates for drivers under 25 years will be increased in the District of Columbia, effective today, by some but not all casualty underwriters, it was disclosed yesterday.

The schedule of increased rates, however, is still subject to justification by the companies putting it into force, and may be partially or entirely set aside later by Albert F. Jordan, superintendent of insurance in the District Government.

Members of Jordan's staff said that the justification will be demanded immediately, and an investigation of the new rates will follow.

However, they said, the new schedule also contains material reductions of liability rates for drivers in certain older age classifications. They said that total effect of the new schedule will be an over-all reduction in rates.

The casualty companies which have filed the new schedule are members of the National Bureau of Casualty Underwriters. A statement from the office of M. O. Hanley, Maryland insurance commissioner, said the bureau recommended the increase for young drivers after a three-year study, because of the increasing number of accidents involving such drivers.

That announcement said similar increases will go into effect in Maryland, 32 other States and Alaska. Virginia is not affected.

Not Dry Behind Their Ears Yet

By Richard L. Coe

"MOTHER DIDN'T TELL ME," at the Palace, is werry toot an thweet and you can have it.

The trouble with this vehicle for Dorothy McGuire and William Lundigan is an astonishingly prolonged adolescence. It is the longest adolescence to be noted in some time. Nobody in it from twin babies to mom and pop through granny is dry behind the ears and probably never will be.

This is, I take it, a comedy, but it's also got a message: doctors lead self-sacrificing lives and so do their wives. It wavers from comedy to farce to solemnity.

Dorothy, who deserves better things, is playing another but inferior "Claudia." She's a jingle writer who marries a doctor. He tells her that being a doctor's wife is going to be very hard, but he loves her, she loves him. His mama wants him to marry a beautiful medical student, now in a far city completing her internship, but eventually promised partnership in William's practice. Mama doesn't think Dorothy will make a good wife for Doctor William. Nor would anybody else with batsense, but mama's reason is different. She wants William to marry The Other Girl and mama was a nurse herself once, married to a doctor.

On their wedding train, a lady needs a doctor; hubby leaves on The Wedding Night. Housing? No problem; a grateful patient obliges with a house that looks like $60,000 to me. Grateful Patient then wants house so hubby buys one he hasn't seen in 12 years (if it was only 6, it seemed like 12) and naturally it's a mess. Dorothy fixes it up, has twins on the advice of another doctor's wife, mercifully played by June Havoc.

Back to claim her partnership comes Old Love, tall, brunette, slinky. Same night enters psychiatrist whose gnatter would give the hives to a 10-year-old. Dorothy and June are beguiled. Jealousy? Nope, psychiatrist drops out of picture. Open warfare between Wife and Partner. Wife packs. Children eat ant poison while granny isn't looking. Maternal instanct thrives. Paternal, too. Grand maternal, also. Understanding. End.

Now had the frothy been emphasized throughout or even the straight farce, "Mother Didn't Tell Me" would probably have been acceptable on that level. But no, we have to be told that under it all Life is serious and we have to assume that a young man who's been able to graduate from medical school is blind when it comes to buying a house. We are asked to be serious about a rival who evidently hasn't written a letter in years and we have to take one more gag about the mind doctors.

"MOTHER DIDN'T TELL ME." Twentieth Century-Fox release produced by Fred Kohlmar. Screen play by Claude Binyon from the book by Mary Bard. "The Doctor Wears Three Faces." Photographed by Joseph La Shelle. Music by Cyril Mockridge. Directed by Binyon. At the Palace.

National Symphony Presents Tschaikowsky Program Here

Richard Keith

Rudolf Firkusny, pianist, who was scheduled to play the B-flat Minor Concerto with the National Symphony Orchestra on their all-Tschaikowsky program yesterday afternoon at Constitution Hall, was forced to cancel his appearance as a result of a hand infection.

The Overture-Fantasy "Romeo and Juliet" and the 1812 Overture were substituted for the concerto.

Every year, most symphony orchestras appease the Tschaikowsky addicts by devoting an entire concert to an orgy of this composer's passionate wailings. That it is profitable and desirable is shown by the large crowds which turn up every time.

Any orchestral program devoted to the works of a single composer is a strain of sorts, but to the ears of sensitive musicians and the arms and lungs of performers, an all-Tschaikowsky stint is an ordeal.

Yesterday's concert was fine and polished from the technical and interpretive standpoint. Precise playing from the woodwinds, rich string ensemble, and Mitchell's reserved expressiveness were all top notch.

A little out of the ordinary was the Mozartiana Suite. Here, Tschaikowsky has attempted to pay his own rather effusive homage to Mozart by writing a set of four pieces on themes from Mozart. The result is neither good Mozart nor good Tschaikowsky It was, nevertheless, a pleasant change.

The concert closed with the Fifth Symphony.

The piano recital by Evelyn Swarthout yesterday evening at the National Gallery was particularly notable for the originality of its contents. It included four sonatas by Norman Dello Joio, Schubert, C. P. E. Bach, and Arnold Bax.

The Dello Joio Sonata No. 3, new to Washington, is a good example of this highly gifted young composer's work. He is one of the few moderns who has been able to make competent use of the traditions of impressionism.

With the exception of a certain stiffness and lack of decisiveness in some passages, Miss Swarthout played with feeling for the music and complete competence. There were moments of real brilliance.

Confessions of a Famous Father

Even Noah Would Have Had Trouble With Dancing School

By John Mason Brown

INSTALLMENT ONE
DANCING IN THE DARK

THERE they were, some 30 of them. Fifteen little boys and 15 little girls, as evenly paired from the point of numbers as if Noah were about to herd them up his gangplank.

There was a difference, however. They had not entered two by two, and plainly did not wish to be identified as couples.

The males and females would have nothing to do with one another. They remained on opposite sides of the room.

Even the music could not bring them together except when a whistle, sharply blown by the dauntless woman whose job it was to run this dancing school party, ordered them to dance.

Then the young males, at least the more tractable of them, would lay off chasing or punching each other and stepping on each other's freshly polished shoes.

They would stop their giggling and whispering, and close their mouths grimly over their braces. In open formation, as though instinct told them they were invading enemy territory, they would advance toward the waiting girls.

Choice of Partners Was Reluctant

EVERY boy would choose a partner. Sometimes the choice was made so reluctantly that the whistle had to be blown again.

To be sure, some of the little boys sometimes escaped. Thereupon, a little girl would either dance quite happily with another little girl or she would sit alone without self-consciousness.

The fear, the humiliation of being a wallflower was unknown to them. That would come later as one of the cruel penalties of growing up.

But their mothers minded. The sudden look of pain or panic that crept across their faces gave away their identity at once. So did the unneeded nods of encouragement which they directed at their children.

For a moment, clearly these women on the sidelines did not see their daughters as daughters. They saw them only as women. And sympathized. And remembered.

Talking, Smiling And Ogling Out

WHEN A BOY and girl had achieved that twosome deemed necessary for ballroom dancing, they would reach for one another much as red caps reach for suitcases.

Scarcely any of the little boys and girls on the floor talked with their partners. They did not smile or ogle, or recognize the other's presence. The girls had words for other girls who passed them; the boys for other boys.

If a couple seemed to be talking, it was not apt to be because they were exchanging pleasantries. It was because they were resolutely counting "one, two, three" until the music stopped.

At this, without warning or farewell, they would scatter. The boys would race and slide to their chosen wall; the girls walk or traipse to theirs. That was that.

"Dancing," says the Britannica in Dama to Educ, "dancing consists in the rhythmical movement of any or all parts of the body in accordance with some scheme of independent or concerted action which is expressive of emotions or ideas."

Maybe so. Maybe so. For the primitive or the professional, for the savage or the adult social, such a definition no doubt holds water. But it has little to do with the young at their first party, fresh from three lessons at dancing school.

Dancing is a subject upon which they cannot be expected to have ideas. The one emotion they may want to express is resistance to dancing at all. They are not so much released as they are coerced by music.

Initial Horror Turns Into Sport

THE INITIAL horror, manifest during the first few numbers, wore off as the afternoon proceeded. Conversation grew less inhibited during the intermissions. More interchange could be overheard, followed by shorter pauses.

In fact, a thaw set in, wisely induced by "musical chairs" and by countless games which kept the children children. If these games were closer to the playing fields of Eton than the purlieus of Arthur Murray, this was all to the good.

Their aim was to make dancing painless. There was an elimination contest, for example, in which couples were put out by the simple, if athletic, process of having a blind-folded girl hit them with a volleyball rolled at random down the floor.

But the true, the irresistible, leveler was the beckoning fact that soft drinks and ice cream would ultimately be served. Accordingly, as the half hours were drummed by, the boys became increasingly willing to forgive the girls for being girls, and vice versa.

Parents Made Young Again

IF, BY SEVEN O'CLOCK, neither sex looked upon the other as an equal, both sexes had entered into an armistice, and for the moment considered each other human.

Meanwhile, we, the parents, the relatives, or the nurses, sat perched on gilt chairs at the end of the room opposite the musicians.

Most of the songs played were bound to quicken the past for us. Some of them were old when we were new. What other days, what other people, what different places, what vanished feelings they re-created!

I do not know about little girls. Since they are feminine, I take it for granted that they are by nature neat. I do, however, know about little boys. So far as they are concerned, cleanliness is next to Godliness and almost as remote. A party that is not a stag party is a pain in the neck.

Our little boy was heartsick at the idea of leaving his water pistol and beanshooter behind him. The very thought of a scrubbed face, brushed hair, hands and arms washed free of ink tattooing, excavated nails and ears, a blue suit, a white shirt that must be kept white, polished shoes, and above all girls and dancing can, at the age of 11, prove a major depressant—and in his case, did!

Finally Won Over By School Friend

IT WAS his school friend who finally won him over. Frank is a year older than our boy. His eyes already have a wolfish twinkle in them. His hair is not always in a state of rebellion. It glistens with signs of having been subdued by tonic.

Frank was undaunted by the prospect of what lay ahead. At luncheon on the very day of the ordeal by music his enthusiasm was contageous.

"It'll be neat," said he, "if only we don't have to dance with that old hag. She's 12. All the guys will be there . . . Tom says they give neat prizes and let you have all the Cokes and ice cream you can get down."

It was this, I suspect, that did the trick. Anyway, I saw him smile, and a light came into his eyes. Right after lunch he was in his room applying cleaning fluid to the spots on his blue suit.

The ageless truth is he had fun—when once he got there. How do I know? Because I watched him. But most especially because night after night since then at home I have heard the victrola playing "The Blue Danube" and come upon him. He has been waltzing quite happily either by himself or with his mother. And, as he goes his reverseless way, he counts "one, two, three" with a smile on his face.

Monday Lunch

Cream of Asparagus Soup
Cream Cheese and Olive Sandwiches on Raisin Bread*
Apple Pudding Beverage
(Recipe for starred dish follows).

Cream cheese and olive sandwiches on raisin bread—Ingredients: 1 three-ounce package cream cheese, 2 tablespoons mayonnaise or mayonnaise-type salad dressing, 2 tablespoons finely diced pimiento-stuffed olives (4 large olives), 1/3 cup finely diced celery, 8 slices raisin bread.

Method: Soften the cream cheese in a small mixing bowl with a spoon; add the mayonnaise or salad dressing and mix well. Mix in olives and celery. This makes 3/4 cup; spread 3 tablespoons of it on each of 4 slices of the raisin bread and top with remaining bread. Cut off crusts if desired and slice each sandwich into 4 small triangles. Or leave sandwiches untrimmed and whole and spread one side of each with butter or margarine; toast quickly under the broiler, turn and spread remaining sides with butter or margarine and finish toasting, then cut each sandwich in four. Use high heat but watch carefully so bread toasts quickly and filling is only slightly warmed.

If the Teddy Bear Loses His Tinkle Anne Finds Two Concerns Who'll Try To Help Him Recover His Lost Voice

WHAT good is a musical teddy bear if his cap goes 'round and 'round and no music comes out here?

Not much, to a youngster who was thrilled speechless when Santa left the blithe bruin at Christmastime. M. H. G. has written asking where such a pet can be repaired.

There are several possibilities, M. H. G. One—which you may have already tried—is to get the store where the bear was purchased to send it back to the factory for repairs. You can do this with some makes.

Also, there are at least two concerns in Washington that repair music boxes. (Telephone numbers: National 4532 and National 0757.) The proprietor of one says the music box must be removed from the teddy bear before being delivered to him for mending. The other says repair work sometimes costs more than the box in such a toy is worth, but adds that he stocks small, inexpensive music boxes that might be used as replacements.

DEAR ANNE:
Your column recently included a picture showing the correct way to serve tea at home. The remarks below the picture included a statement that the table top was plate glass, supported by plaster columns. Would it be possible for an amateur to make a table of these materials? Would it be expensive? I would appreciate any details and suggestions.
Mrs. M. S. H., Washington.

The table mentioned was made of a 32-by-60-inch rectangle of plate glass one-half inch thick, supported by two white columns with 13-by-13-inch caps. Decorator Jefferson Davis, who constructed it for his own apartment, had the columns made of plaster. However, he tells me discarded wooden columns could as easily be used.

Yes, an amateur could assemble such a table. Plate glass for the top is obtainable from local dealers. Glass of this thickness isn't cheap, but you'll have a very handsome piece of modern furniture when you get through. Mr. Davis will be glad to give you more information if you call him in the evening at Decautr 0105.

PETUNIA!

I've done my beauty duties now,
All excepting one
Cleaning combs just simply isn't
My idea of fun.

But it's a cinch, Petunia! Just fill a glass jar with water, add a bit of ammonia, leave the comb standing in it for an hour. Remove—rinse—dry.

DEAR ANNE:
Is it safe to store tomato juice, pineapple juice, etc., in the refrigerator over night in the original can after it has been opened?
Mrs. L. J. Fawcett
209 South St. Asaph st., Alexandria, Va.

Yes, can manufacturers line their product in such a way now that the food can safely be stored in the can.

DEAR ANNE:
For the information of the sewing contest entrant who was interested in making belt buckles: I have seen very lovely ones made of linoleum covered with dress materials.

For three-fourths-inch belt, a buckle (solid face) 2 inches long by three-fourths inch wide, either oval, rectangular, or other shape, is cut from linoleum scraps. After covering the buckle, it is "blind-stitched" to the belt and the belt is fastened with snaps or hooks-and-eyes or both.

At most dime stores, belt backing can be bought either in the width desired or trimmed to the needed width. It's a good idea to preshrink all materials for belts you expect to wash later. You can either stitch the dress material to the backing or make a casing to fit over it. If you want further information, my phone is Falls Church 3486.

G. G. Not Exactly a Girl Anymore; Statistics Tattle

You've heard about the "average Government girl." You've heard speculation on what she wears, how she lives, what her marriage prospects are.

If you're an average reader, you've probably thought of the aforesaid G. G. as a "girl" in fact as well as in name, freshly plucked from stenography class. Actually the median age for female Government workers is 36.9 years.

This figure is among many revealed in a booklet which becomes available today. In it, the U. S. Department of Labor Women's Bureau has summarized trends in employment among "Women in the Federal Service" from 1923 to 1947. (Bulletin No. 230, I.)

Not Getting Rich

The book reveals that less than 15 out of 100 earned over $3000 in the period studied. Only 9 in every 1000 received as much as $5000 and one in every 1000 as much as $7000.

The salaries for women were, on the average, lower than those for men at each age over 20. Years of service, rather than age, however, seemed to affect the salary level. Women with fewer than five years of service had a median salary of $2390. Average salaries rose at each succeeding length of service class to $3367 for women with 45 to 49 years of service.

Shows Improvement

Still, the picture shows a vast improvement over that in 1860, when eight women were hired to work in the dead-letter office in the Post Office Department at salaries of $700 a year—although men doing the same job were paid $800

The Treasury Department alone now has over 43,000 women employes. There are 440,597 women in Government work as a whole, according to the last date reported in this study, June, 1947. This postwar estimate shows a sharp decline from the wartime peak, when women employes shot up to 1,106,132 by the third year of the war. Women formed 8 percent of the total personnel during that period. By 1947 they formed less than a quarter.

The first formal statutory provision for the employment of women in Government was contained in something rather unhappily called the "Deficiency Act" passed in 1864. Six hundred dollars was set as a top salary for women. Two years later it was reset at $900, where it remained until 1923.

Women workers even outdate the Constitution, however. Two women served as postmistresses giving the Post Office the distinction of being women's first field of Government employment—before the adoption of the Constitution.

Today's Government gal works in an office or Government installation of some kind, but by no means necessarily in Washington. Only a fifth of the women in Government in 1947 lived in the District. The rest were scattered around the Nation.

More than half of the women were employed in three agencies concerned with war or its aftermath: the War Department, the Navy Department and the Veterans Administration.

"Bill used to call me his 'Harried Harriet'!"
"But not any more — not since we had an extension telephone installed in the kitchen. When the telephone rings now, I don't have to drop everything and rush to another room to answer it. Believe me, it certainly saves me a lot of time, steps and trouble. I wouldn't be without my extension telephone for anything!
"It makes kitchen work much easier, too, because it's so handy for ordering groceries, shopping and other things. And I find I have more time to spend with Bill and the baby. In my book, there's nothing like an extension telephone for convenience, comfort and kitchen efficiency."

Pope Pius XII—Priest and Statesman

Love for Nature, and People, Born in Studious Boyhood

Kees Van Hoek, a native of The Hague and now an Irish citizen, has been a correspondent in London, Geneva and the United States. His first biography of Pius XII appeared in 1939. After much research and a private audience with the Pope last fall, Van Hoek has written in "Pope Pius XII, Priest and Statesman," a full and vivid description of the man and his career, from a delicate boy in Rome to supreme ruler of the Roman Catholic world. The biography is presented by The Washington Post during the present Holy Year in 24 daily installments.

II—The Roman

THE NEW Pontiff hails from Ponte, a quiet quarter of the City of Rome near the River Tiber. One can see the Dome of St. Peter's from there and the Angel on the Castle of the Caesars. In one of its sedate streets, the Via degli Orsini, stands the Palazzo Pediconi—a big four-storied house, stuccoed a reddish brown, unassuming as Roman palazzi go, a high gate leading to a small courtyard with its bubbling fountain, that soothing sound which is so typically Roman and different from the exuberance of other Southern cities.

The old rubs shoulders with the new even in this street off the beaten track; there is a modest Madonna statue at the corner of the house, never without its small votive light or a few flowers, but the ground-floor wall is bedecked with modern posters, advertising olive oil and radio.

On March 2, 1876, in the third story, a dark-eyed boy was born, carried 'round that very same day to the neighboring baroque parish church of San Celso, where his uncle baptized him Eugenio Maria Giuseppe Giovanni.

The names themselves indicate a pious family, for they invoked on their Eugenio the protection of St. Mary, St. Joseph, and of St. John, the beloved disciple. That boy as destined to become the 261st successor to St. Peter as Pope of Rome.

The family, small country aristocracy, originally hailed from the province of Viterbo. Marcantonio Pacelli, the grandfather of the present Pope, had been called to Rome by his uncle, Cardinal Catterini, who supervised his juridical studies. Later, Cardinal Antonelli, Prime Minister of the then Papal States, made him Under-Secretary of State for the Interior. In 1870, when Victor Emmanuel of Savoy became first king of a united Italy, Marcantonio Pacelli refused the invitation of the new Italian government to become a royal councillor of state. His loyalty remained pledged to his own sovereign, the aged and ever-forbearing Pio Nono, who had become voluntarily a prisoner in his own palace; that loyalty he kept until his death at the age of a hundred.

Careers of Brothers

OF his seven sons one became a famous banker, founder of the Banco di Roma; the third, Filippo, a prominent politician, one of the leaders of the Unione Romano, the clerical party. By profession he was dean of the Consistorial Advocates, the Vatican Bar, whose members one sees at pontifical ceremonies in their old Spanish court dress of carmine red and black velvet. He had married the Hon. Virginia Graziosi, who came from one of the old patrician families of Rome; their union was blessed with two sons and two daughters.

The eldest, Francesco, followed his father's career. He was the lawyer who, in intimate collaboration with Pius XI and the Duce, did most of the labor which resulted in the historic Lateran Treaty of 1928, whereby the Papal See and the Italian Kingdom composed the differences which had rent Church and state so deeply that even the aristocracy of Rome was divided into a "black" section, stubbornly loyal to the Pope as sovereign.

The younger brother was Eugenio. On the day the treaty was signed, the two brothers Pacelli—Francesco, the lawyer, created a marquis for his services, and Eugenio, then already Archbishop and Nuncio—decked the grave of their parents with flowers, to celebrate the conciliation of the two Romes.

Eugenio grew up as most boys of his surroundings did. He played mass in the little chapel he had made at home, as so many Catholic boys do the world over, deadly serious. As a young child the tales of the missionaries set his imagination on fire, and he came home to tell his mother that he wanted to become a missionary, too, "but without the martyrdom," he added cautiously.

Sent to State School

ORTHODOX though the members of the Pacelli family were, this was, nevertheless, blended with a certain matter-of-factness. For a boy of a Catholic home to attend a state school was almost unheard of in these days. Yet Eugenio was sent to the Visconti Grammar School because his father considered that it had then no equal in Rome. The clash of opinions and sentiments strengthened his convictions. Once the boys were told to write an essay on a "Maker of History," and one of his classmates had chosen St. Augustine as his subject. The history master ridiculed the choice in front of the class.

Eugenio stood up and took the blame; it had been his advice which had induced this choice, and as for himself he was quite willing, if the master allowed, to defend it there and then. When he left the grammar school, with honors, he not only had the best mark for languages, but was awarded the gold medal for history. One of his teachers, Prof. Antonio Neviani, recollected him as a model pupil, "serious, studious and intellectually outstanding."

It had been expected that he would enter the legal profession, but reticent Eugenio nursed the hope of studying for the priesthood. That he felt as a vocation; notwithstanding the occasional banter of his friends, he liked to go in the quiet of an evening to a church to pray and meditate. Finally, being allowed to enter the Capranica Seminary, he had to leave it after a year; the rigors of community life were too severe for his delicate health.

Grew Too Fast for Age

HE HAD grown too fast for his age, a tall, gaunt youth. His health began to fail alarmingly; medical opinion prescribed a complete rest, but soon found out that his studies, to which he clung with all his heart, should not be denied to him.

His father's influence with the ecclesiastical authorities secured him the unusual experience of remaining in the midst of his family whilst engaged in his study for the priesthood. He went daily to the courses of the Capranica, following all the same, at home, the observances to which he would have been subject as a resident student.

Only every morning, on the orders of the doctor, he went for a canter on horseback through the Roman Campagna, over those roads bordered by tall pines and olive orchards, roads full of the remains of ancient times, the great aqueduct on his way out, the spires and cupolas of the city his vista on his way back. Here his love for nature, for the simple people, and for the city of his birth was born.

Summers in Country

THE summer holidays he spent on the family estate, where as a boy he had followed his father after hares and patridges. Punctual in the extreme, it was Pacelli's modest boast that he had never been late or kept anyone waiting, save in one instance which he is fond of recounting.

To reach Rome from their country place, he had to go by carriage to Orvieto, the nearest railway station. Scalabretta, the local coachman, used to stop halfway, at San Lorenzo, for a drink. As he was fond of his horse, he used to give it a pint of wine, too.

One day when young Pacelli was suddenly summoned to Rome, he drove down to Orvieto Station himself. Passing SanLorenzo, the horse stopped and expectantly turned round for his usual pint. Pacelli remembered, and told the inn-keeper to make it two pints this time, as was in a hurry and wanted the horse to feel its very best.

Indeed, the Rosinante took the next hill in great style, but having reached the crest he found such an exertion too exhausting and lay down for a quiet snooze. Pacelli had to walk the rest of the way—it was his first experience of the wisdom of moderation.

The More We Meet

The more I talk to people and . . . The older that I get . . . The more I gather memories . . . That multiply my debt . . . My growing debt of gratitude . . . To all who think of me . . . And take a little time to share . . . Their friendly company . . . Sometimes their hearts are happy and . . . They greet me with a smile . . . And then again their troubles are . . . As long as any mile . . . But always I am fond of them . . . For every word they say . . . If only for the pleasant pause . . . To pass the time of day . . . And always I am grateful for . . . The dreams they pass along . . . To help me overcome my tears . . . And make my life a song.

What Happened to the Minimum Wage Law?

Our morning contemporary recently reported on Page One that the Department of Defense had fired 163,000 employes, at an annual saving of $500,000.

As close as I can figure it, 162,900 of them must have been dollar-a-year men.

ADD NAMES

Nurse Vera LaMaster of 321 34th st. ne. reports that one of the patients at Providence Hospital is a Mr. Cabbagestalk.

HOW'S THAT AGAIN?

When Lawyer Harry S. Wender heard a waiter in a local grill ask the kitchen for "sirloin with mashed and French fried," he remarked to his own waiter: "Somebody must like a lot of potatoes with his steak."

"Oh, pay no attention to that guy," replied Harry's waiter. "He's always getting things mixed up. Yesterday he ordered a sandwich like that—'white on rye.'"

MISCELLANY

The Orlando (Fla.) Chamber of Commerce is giving a testimonial dinner Thursday for WTOP's Arch McDonald, "the man who did the most for Orlando in 1949." So WTOP General Manager John S. Hayes is flying down to Orlando to attend. He tells me (with a straight face): "These testimonial dinners usually drag on and on, you know, so don't expect me back for about a week or so." . . . Live and learn. I just encountered a reader who thinks this column appears on Saturdays only . . . Robert Rockwell of 4104 53d ave., Hyattsville, Md., says his pet peeve is people who buy turn-indicators for their cars and then are too lazy to use them . . . Reminds me of the time I was almost killed in a highway accident because of an old farmer who didn't put out his hand to signal a left turn. "Too danged cold," he told me later. "I didn't want to roll down the window" . . . Mrs. E. L. A. reports that her husband rubs a bit of paraffin wax on the inside of his shirt collars, and thereby foils the laundries that are apparently trying to use up a huge surplus of starch. For good measure, she sends along $2 for Children's Hospital . . . J. H. Davidson of 7813 Marlboro pike contends that the biggest thing wrong with the taxi situation in Washingotn is that we have about 5000 part-time hackers here. He doesn't think a driver can be much of an asset to the industry or the public after he's worked 8 hours on some other job first . . . Rottenest trick of the season is reported by William J. Mallgrave. Bill's wife saw a middle-aged woman drop a nickel in the cup of a blind man on F st. between 12th and 13th, and then take out a quarter in "change."

GIVE-AWAYS

"Two black-and-white female puppies, 6 weeks old; mixture of spitz, spaniel and shepherd." (Brandywine, Md., 4201.)

"Ten-year collection of Readers' Digest for any worthwhile organization." (Owens 4135.)

"Wonderful 2-year-old Eskimo spitz male needs home with fenced yard." (Decatur 9499 after 6 p. m.)

"One-year-old lady beagle, used to children, wants home in country." (Juniper 7-7234).

"Very affectionate, black-and-white 8-week-old male puppy." (King 8-7915).

PERSONAL NOTES

Mrs. Arthur Kreibich, 5813 31st pl., Hyattsville, Md.: I think I'll save your postcard about the little boy who was so happy to get a Give-Away puppy on his birthday, and the next time somebody tries to tell me that the Give-Aways "waste space," I'll let your card win the argument for me.

OVERHEARD

"It was my best joke, but it went over like an iron balloon."

IRISH IRE

Some folks with the map of Ireland on their faces have called the city desk to complain that they could not find their names on the map of Ireland printed in The Post to mark St. Patrick's Day. They were named Muldoon.

The mapmakers explained that some honest-to-goodness Irish names were omitted because of lack of space. Others were not listed because they had spread throughout the Emerald Isle so early that researchers could not find their home towns. Jones was included in this category.

MAIL BAG

Dear Bill:

Please don't use my name, or I'll probably be kicked out into the street. Here's my complaint:

I live in a big apartment development. The other day the office called to tell me that it was holding a parcel post package addressed to me. I don't know how it got there; perhaps the mailman tried to deliver it when there was nobody home, and left it at the office instead.

I said I'd be over after the package as soon as possible, but we were all down with the flu and I couldn't get out for several days. And when I finally called for the package, I was told: "We can't hold them forever; we kept it a few days and then sent it back."

Can they do that?

Name Withheld

Dear Madam:

They did it, so I guess they can. But it's no way to win friends and influence tenants.

My reaction is that the office was under no obligation to accept the package for you in the first place. But once they did so, they assumed the responsibility—moral, if not legal—of making a reasonable effort to see that you got your package.

There may be a good reason for your landlord's action, but on the surface it certainly doesn't sound very neighborly, does it?

Bill.

Big Business Guns for Truman

By Drew Pearson

A quiet campaign by big business to defeat the Truman Administration was launched in New York the other day under the auspices of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Pearson

Chairmanned by Carrol E. French of Standard Oil of New Jersey, a group of big business executives discussed plans for a propaganda drive through employe magazines and by putting slips into employes' pay envelopes.

Chief speaker at the closed-door meeting was Lemuel Boulware, vice president of the giant General Electric Corp. and former vice chairman of the War Production Board. Boulware announced that General Electric was actively campaigning for the Taft-Hartley Act, against the unions and, above all, against socialism.

"Roosevelt, Truman, Reuther and their ilk are the avowed enemies of American business," Boulware told his fellow executives in brief. "They consider the American businessman a thief, a cheat and a coward. The time has come for the American bussinessman to stand up and take a stand for what he believes in.

"Therefore, General Electric," he said, "is taking a strong stand aganst socialism which we regard as a more serious menace than communism."

Boulware, who is in charge of G. E.'s labor relations, also stated that no union on a national level is any good.

Business executives were also urged to give as much circulation as possible to "The Road Ahead," written by bitter Roosevelt-hater John T. Flynn.

Harum-Scarum Senator

Republicans have been getting more and more embarrassed over the antics of harum-scarum Senator Joe McCarthy of Wisconsin. After claiming 207 pro-Communists and disloyalists were on the State Department's payroll, smiling Joe hasn't named a single State Department official who was a pro-Communist and made the charge stick.

The trouble with Joe is that he rushes into situations where he doesn't have the facts, just as he rushed into his own election campaign in Wisconsin without resigning from the Court of Appeals. As a result of using the judicial bench as a campaign forum, the Board of Bar Commissioners lodged the following serious charge against him before the Supreme Court:

"It is difficult to conceive of any conduct upon the part of a presiding judge which would bring judges and courts into greater disrepute and contempt than the conduct of the defendant (McCarthy) challenged in this proceeding.

"He, as an officer of the court, knowingly and willfully, placed the gratification of his personal ambition above the interests of the public and the rights of litigants.

"The defendant, by his conduct, chose to defy the rules of ethical conduct prescribed by the Constitution, the laws of the State of Wisconsin, and the members of the profession, in order to attain a selfish personal advantage. The gratification of his ambition was in defiance of the declared public policy and laws of the State of Wisconsin."

The Wisconsin Supreme Court held that McCarthy was guilty of the above charge, but for some reason failed to disbar him. This caused the irrepressible gentleman, who now flings charges at the State Department, to smirk at the Board of Bar Commissioners as follows:

"Their actions are a disgrace to every honest, decent lawyer in the State of Wisconsin and they should resign."
